KING HENRY V
Grandpré. The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hands.

(Act IV, Scene 2)
The Notes and Appendices in this edition are substantially those of the Junior School Shakespeare. For the purpose of this edition both texts and notes have been revised by practical teachers, in order to secure entire suitability for class use, and particularly for the needs of those reading for the College of Preceptors or Junior Local Examinations. The following are the names of those who have performed this work of revision:—

Miss Ada S. Ambler, North London Collegiate School.
Miss E. Creak, B.A., Headmistress, King Edward's High School, Birmingham.
G. M. Gwyther, M.A., Senior English Master, Plymouth and Mannnamead College.
J. W. Iliffe, M.A., Central Higher School, Sheffield.
Miss Amy Lumb, St. Hilda's College, Cheltenham.
A. Scott, B.A., Westoe Road Higher Grade School, South Shields.
Miss Charlotte J. Weightman, Camden School for Girls.

iv
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Historical Introduction</th>
<th>-</th>
<th>-</th>
<th>-</th>
<th>-</th>
<th>-</th>
<th>Page vii</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Dramatis Personæ</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>x</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>KING HENRY V</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Notes</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>111</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Appendices—

1. Date of the Play   | - | - | - | - | - | 154
2. Historical Inaccuracies | - | - | - | - | - | 155
3. Critical Appreciation | - | - | - | - | - | 156

At the time of Henry V's accession, France was in a disturbed and distracted condition. Owing to the imbecility of its monarch, Charles VI, and his total unfitness to rule, the country was divided into two great factions, at the head of which were the Duke of Orleans, brother of the king, and his cousin the Duke of Burgundy, and these rival chiefs were now engaged in a struggle for the supremacy.

The moment seemed to Henry a favourable one for attack, and he accordingly revived the claim of Edward III to the throne of France. This claim, which was of doubtful validity in Edward's case, was still more so in Henry's, whose father was an usurper. But he was probably urged to the step by considerations of policy. A war with France successfully carried through would help to divert attention from the defects in his title to the throne of England, and give him the opportunity of putting into effect his father's counsel to "busy giddy minds with foreign quarrels", that no leisure might be left them to dwell on the memory of former days.

The French government sought to avert the threatened invasion by the offer of the duchy of Aquitaine, and of the hand of Catherine, the king's eldest daughter, in marriage, but without avail.

Towards the end of July, 1415, Henry had assembled a force of 30,000 men at Southampton, and was on the point of embarking, when the discovery of a dangerous conspiracy delayed his departure for a few days. It was found that the Earl of Cambridge, Lord Scroop, and Sir Thomas Grey had formed a plot to assassinate the king and raise the Earl of March to the throne. Their guilt being clearly proved, all three offenders were executed.

Putting to sea, Henry directed his course to Harfleur, a town at the mouth of the Seine, which he at once proceeded to invest. After a siege of five weeks the place capitulated. But during that time sickness had made such ravages among his troops that the army was now reduced to half its original strength. Henry therefore decided to return home before further prosecuting his designs. But lest his return should have the appearance of running away, or be construed as a failure, he formed the resolution of marching through the enemy's country to Calais, and there embarking for England. It was a perilous undertaking, for besides exposure to harassing attacks, the troops suffered much from cold, and wet, and want of food. The little band, however, slowly made its way through Normandy and Picardy, until its progress was barred by the appearance of a French army numbering 60,000 men on the plains of Agincourt, and so posted as to intercept all further advance.

The number of the English had by this time dwindled down to less than 10,000 men. They were, moreover, enfeebled by sickness and fatigue. But one and all shared the undaunted spirit of their leader, though fully conscious of the peril of their position. The two armies halted for the night within a short distance of each other. By daybreak each army had taken up its position. That of the English was admirably chosen, being a narrow field which the enemy could only approach in front, while their flanks were protected by hedges and thickets. Mindful of what had happened at Crecy and Poitiers, the French hesitated to attack, and some hours were passed in a state of inactivity on both sides. At length Henry gave the order to advance. His archers, planting in the ground the stakes with which they were provided, ran forward and discharged shower after shower of arrows with deadly effect, and when pressed by the French cavalry, retired for protection behind their palisade of stakes. The horses of the enemy, afflicted with innumerable wounds, became restive and unmanageable, and spread disorder through the ranks. The narrowness of the space in which they were confined cramped their movements and deprived them of the advantage of superior numbers. Henry, seizing the right moment, advanced with his men-at-arms upon the helpless and struggling mass. The carnage was terrible; the discomfiture of the enemy complete.

Scarcely pausing to take rest, the victors continued their march, and on arriving at Calais crossed over to Dover, where they were received with a delirium of joy, the people rushing into the sea and carrying the king in triumph to the shore. The same enthusiastic welcome awaited them at London, and throughout the country there was the greatest rejoicing.

In 1417 the king again embarked for France, and was occupied for the next two years in reducing the greater part of Normandy to his authority. The dissension and civil strife that still racked that unhappy country at length brought about the realization of his long-cherished project. For the new Duke of Burgundy, in order to be revenged on the Dauphin for the part he had taken in the murder of his father, made overtures to Henry which resulted in the treaty of Troyes, 1420. As Queen Isabella was now a supporter of Burgundy, it was arranged that Henry should marry the Princess Catherine, be regent during the life-time of Charles, and be recognized as his successor to the throne. The great object, however, of Henry's ambition was never fully attained, for, a few months before the death of Charles, he was smitten with disease, and died, 1422, at the early age of thirty-four.
DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

KING HENRY the Fifth.
DUKE of GLOUCESTER, brothers to the King.
DUKE of BEDFORD,
DUKE of EXETER, uncle to the King.
DUKE of YORK, cousin to the King.
EARLS of SALISBURY, WESTMORELAND, and WARWICK.
ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY.
BISHOP of ELY.
EARL of CAMBRIDGE.
LORD SCROOP.
SIR THOMAS GREY.
SIR THOMAS ERPINGHAM, GOWER, FLUELLEN, MACMORRIS, JAMY, officers in King Henry's army.
BATES, COURT, WILLIAMS, soldiers in the same.
PISTOL, NYM, BARDOLPH.
Boy.
A Herald.
CHARLES the SIXTH, King of France.
LEWIS, the Dauphin.
DUKES of BURGUNDY, ORLEANS, and BOURBON.
The Constable of France.
RAMBURES and GRANDPRÉ, French Lords.
Governor of Harfleur.
MONTJOY, a French Herald.
Ambassadors to the King of England.

ISABEL, Queen of France.
KATHARINE, daughter to Charles and Isabel.
ALICE, a lady attending on her.
Hostess of a tavern in Eastcheap, formerly Mistress Quickly, and now married to Pistol.

Lords, Ladies, Officers, Soldiers, Citizens, Messengers, and Attendants. Chorus.

SCENE: England; afterwards France.
KING HENRY V

PROLOGUE

Enter Chorus

Chor. O for a Muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention,
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and at his heels,
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword and fire
Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentles all,
The flat unraised spirits that have dared
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object: can this cockpit hold
The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
Within this wooden O the very casques
That did affright the air at Agincourt?
O, pardon! since a crooked figure may
Attest in little place a million;
And let us, ciphers to this great accompt,
On your imaginary forces work.
Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confined two mighty monarchies,
Whose high upreared and abutting fronts
The perilous narrow ocean parts asunder:
Piecè out our imperfections with your thoughts;
Into a thousand parts divide one man,
And make imaginary puissance;
Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
Printing their proud hoofs i' the receiving earth;
For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry them here and there; jumping o'er times,
Turning the accomplishment of many years
Into an hour-glass: for the which supply,
Admit me Chorus to this history;
Who prologue-like your humble patience pray
Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.

[Exit]

ACT I

SCENE I. London. An ante-chamber in the King's palace

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Ely

Cant. My lord, I'll tell you; that self bill is urged,
Which in the eleventh year of the last king's reign
Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
But that the scambling and unquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.

Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now.

Cant. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,
We lose the better half of our possession:
For all the temporal lands which men devout
By testament have given to the church
Would they strip from us; being valued thus:
As much as would maintain, to the king's honour,
Full fifteen earls and fifteen hundred knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
And, to relief of lazers and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
A hundred almshouses right well supplied;
And to the coffers of the king beside,
A thousand pounds by the year: thus runs the bill.
Ely. This would drink deep.
Cant. 'T would drink the cup and all. 20
Ely. But what prevention?
Cant. The king is full of grace and fair regard.
Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.
Cant. The courses of his youth promised it not.
The breath no sooner left his father's body,

But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too; yea, at that very moment
Consideration, like an angel, came
And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him,
Leaving his body as a paradise,
To envelope and contain celestial spirits.
Never was such a sudden scholar made;
Never came reformation in a flood,
With such a heady currance, scouring faults;
Nor never Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat and all at once
As in this king.
Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity,
And all-admiring with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate:
Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
You would say it hath been all in all his study:
List his discourse of war, and you shall hear
A fearful battle render'd you in music:
Turn him to any cause of policy,
(The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,) 40
Familiar as his garter: that, when he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honey'd sentences;
So that the art and practic part of life
Must be the mistress to this theoric:
Which is a wonder how his grace should glean it,
Since his addiction was to courses vain,
His companies unletter'd, rude and shallow,
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports,
And never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity.

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle, 60
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality:
And so the prince obscured his contemplation
Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt,
Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,
Unseen, yet crescive in his faculty.

Cant. It must be so; for miracles are ceased;
And therefore we must needs admit the means
How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord, 70
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urged by the commons? Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?

Cant. He seems indifferent,
Or rather swaying more upon our part
Than cherishing the exhibitors against us;
For I have made an offer to his majesty,
Upon our spiritual convocation
And in regard of causes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
As touching France, to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem received, my lord?

Cant. With good acceptance of his majesty;
Save that there was not time enough to hear,
As I perceived his grace would fain have done,
The severals and unhidden passages
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms
And generally to the crown and seat of France
Derived from Edward, his great-grandfather.

Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off? o

Cant. The French ambassador upon that instant
Crvad audience; and the hour, I think, is come
To give him hearing; is it four o'clock?

Ely. It is.

Cant. Then go we in, to know his embassy;
Which I could with a ready guess declare,
Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

Ely. I'll wait upon you, and I long to hear it. | Exeunt

Scene 2. The same. The presence-chamber

Enter King Henry, Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, and Attendants

K. Hen. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?
Exe. Not here in presence.
K. Hen. Send for him, good uncle.
West. Shall we call in the ambassador, my liege?

K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin: we would be resolved,
Before we hear him, of some things of weight
That task our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Ely

Cant. God and his angels guard your sacred throne
And make you long become it!

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you.
My learned lord, we pray you to proceed
And justly and religiously unfold
Why the law Salique that they have in France
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim:
And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,
Or nicely charge your understanding soul
With opening titles miscreate, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth;
For God doth know how many now in health
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to.
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake our sleeping sword of war:
We charge you, in the name of God, take heed;
For never two such kingdoms did contend
Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops
Are every one a woe, a sore complaint
'Gainst him whose wrongs give edge unto the swords
That make such waste in brief mortality.
Under this conjuration speak, my lord;
For we will hear, note and believe in heart
That what you speak is in your conscience wash'd
As pure as sin with baptism.

Cant. Then hear me, gracious sovereign, and you peers,
That owe yourselves, your lives and services
To this imperial throne. There is no bar
To make against your highness' claim to France
But this, which they produce from Pharamond,
'In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant':
'No woman shall succeed in Salique land':
Which Salique land the French unjustly close
To be the realm of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this law and female bar.
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm
That the land Salique is in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe;
Where Charles the Great, having subdued the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certain French;
Who, holding in disdain the German women
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establish'd then this law; to wit, no female
Should be inheritrix in Salique land:
Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,
Is at this day in Germany call'd Meisen.
Then doth it well appear the Salique law
Was not devised for the realm of France;
Nor did the French possess the Salique land
Until four hundred one and twenty years
After defunction of King Pharamond,
Idly supposed the founder of this law;
Who died within the year of our redemption
Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the Great Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the river Sala, in the year
Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
King Pepin, which deposed Childeric,
Did, as heir general, being descended
Of Blithild, which was daughter to King Clothair,
Make claim and title to the crown of France.
Hugh Capet also, who usurp'd the crown

(M. 840)
Of Charles the duke of Lorraine, sole heir male
Of the true line and stock of Charles the Great,
To find his title with some shows of truth,
Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught
Convey'd himself as heir to the Lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son
To Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son
Of Charles the Great. Also King Lewis the Tenth,
Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied
That fair Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lineal of the Lady Ermengare,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorraine:
By the which marriage the line of Charles the Great
Was re-united to the crown of France.
So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,
King Pepin's title and Hugh Capet's claim,
King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear
To hold in right and title of the female:
So do the kings of France unto this day;
Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law
To bar your highness claiming from the female,
And rather choose to hide them in a net
Than amply to imbar their crooked titles
Usurp'd from you and your progenitors.

K. Hen. May I with right and conscience make this claim?

Cant. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign!
For in the book of Numbers is it writ,
When the man dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
Stand for your own; unwind your bloody flag;
Look back into your mighty ancestors:
Go, my dread lord, to your great-grandsire's tomb,
From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,
And your great-uncle's, Edward the Black Prince, Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy, Making defeat on the full power of France, While his most mighty father on a hill Stood smiling to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility. O noble English, that could entertain With half their forces the full pride of France And let another half stand laughing by, All out of work and cold for action!

_Ely._ Awake remembrance of these valiant dead And with your puissant arm renew their feats: You are their heir; you sit upon their throne; The blood and courage that renowned them Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege Is in the very May-morn of his youth, Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises.

_Exc._ Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,

_West._ They know your grace hath cause and means and might;

So hath your highness; never king of England Had nobles richer and more loyal subjects, Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

_Cant._ O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege, With blood and sword and fire to win your right; In aid whereof we of the spirituality Will raise your highness such a mighty sum As never did the clergy at one time Bring in to any of your ancestors.

_K. Hen._ We must not only arm to invade the French, But lay down our proportions to defend Against the Scot, who will make road upon us With all advantages.
Cant. They of those marches, gracious sovereign,
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the coursing snatchers only,
But fear the main intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us;
For you shall read that my great-grandfather
Never went with his forces into France
But that the Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom
Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and brim fulness of his force,
Galling the gleaned land with hot assays,
Girding with grievous siege castles and towns;
That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook and trembled at the ill neighbourhood.

Cant. She hath been then more fear'd than harm'd, my liege;
For hear her but exampled by herself:
When all her chivalry hath been in France
And she a mourning widow of her nobles
She hath herself not only well defended
But taken and impounded as a stray
The King of Scots; whom she did send to France,
To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings
And make her chronicle as rich with praise
As is the ooze and bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sumless treasuries.

West. But there's a saying very old and true,

'If that you will France win,
Then with Scotland first begin':

For once the eagle England being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weasel Scot
Comes sneaking and so sucks her princely eggs,
Playing the mouse in absence of the cat,
To tear and havoc more than she can eat.

_Exe._ It follows then the cat may stay at home:
Yet that is but a crush'd necessity,
Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home;
For government, though high and low and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one consent,
Congreeing in a full and natural close,
Like music.

_Cant._ Therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience; for so work the honey-bees,
Creatures that by a rule in nature teach
The act of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king and officers of sorts;
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home,
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad,
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings;
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds,
Which pillage they with merry march bring home
To the tent-royal of their emperor.

Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold,
The civil citizens kneading up the honey,
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate,
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. _I this infer,
That many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariously:
As many arrows, loosed several ways.
Come to one mark; as many ways meet in one town;
As many fresh streams meet in one salt sea;
As many lines close in the dial's centre;
So may a thousand actions, once afoot,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my liege.
Divide your happy England into four;
Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried and our nation lose
The name of hardiness and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin. [Exeunt some Attendants

Now are we well resolved; and, by God's help,
And yours, the noble sinews of our power,
France being ours, we'll bend it to our awe,
Or break it all to pieces: or there we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery
O'er France and all her almost kingly dukedoms,
Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them:
Either our history shall with full mouth
Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France

Now are we well prepared to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for we hear
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.

First Amb. May't please your majesty to give us leave
Freely to render what we have in charge;
Or shall we sparingly show you far off
The Dauphin's meaning and our embassy?

K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king; Unto whose grace our passion is as subject As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons: Therefore with frank and with uncurbed plainness Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

First Amb. Thus, then, in few. Your highness, lately sending into France, Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right Of your great predecessor, King Edward the Third. In answer of which claim, the prince our master Says that you savour too much of your youth, And bids you be advised there's nought in France That can be with a nimble galliard won; You cannot revel into dukedoms there. He therefore sends you, meeter for your spirit, This tun of treasure; and, in lieu of this, Desires you let the dukedoms that you claim Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin speaks.

K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?

Exe. Tennis-balls, my liege.

K. Hen. We are glad the Dauphin is so pleasant With us; true Henry reveals his courtesy His present and your pains we thank you for:
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls, We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard. Tell him he hath made a match with such a wrangler That all the courts of France will be disturb'd With chaces. And we understand him well, How he comes o'er us with our wilder days, Not measuring what use we made of them. We never valued this poor seat of England; And therefore, living hence, did give ourself To barbarous license; as 'tis ever common That men are merriest when they are from home.
But tell the Dauphin I will keep my state,
Be like a king and show my sail of greatness
When I do rouse me in my throne of France:
For that I have laid by my majesty
And plodded like a man for working-days,
But I will rise there with so full a glory
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.
And tell the pleasant prince this mock of his Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones; and his soul
Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows
Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down;
And some are yet ungotten and unborn
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn.
But this lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; and in whose name
Tell you the Dauphin I am coming on,
To venge me as I may and to put forth
My rightful hand in a well-hallow'd cause.
So get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin
His jest will savour but of shallow wit,
When thousands weep more than did laugh at it.
Convey them with safe conduct. Fare you well.

[Execut Ambassadors

Exe. This was a merry message.

K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.
Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour
That may give furtherance to our expedition;
For we have now no thought in us but France,
Save those to God, that run before our business.
Therefore let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected and all things thought upon
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings; for, God before,
K' Hen. But tell the Dauphin I will keep my state,
Be like a king and show my seal of greatness
When I do rouse me in my throne of France. — Act i. 2. 273–275
We'll chide this Dauphin at his father's door.
Therefore let every man now task his thought,
That this fair action may on foot be brought.

[Exeunt. Flourish

ACT II

PROLOGUE

Flourish. Enter Chorus

Chor. Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies:
Now thrive the armourers, and honour's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man:
They sell the pasture now to buy the horse,
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English Mercuries.
For now sits Expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilts unto the point
With crowns imperial, crowns and coronets,
Promised to Harry and his followers.
The French advised by good intelligence
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes.
O England! model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,
What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out
A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns; and three corrupted men,
One, Richard Earl of Cambridge, and the second,
Henry Lord Scroop of Masham, and the third,
Sir Thomas Grey, knight, of Northumberland,
Have, for the gilt of France,—O guilt indeed!
Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France;
And by their hands this grace of kings must die,
If hell and treason hold their promises,
Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.
Linger your patience on; and we'll digest

Chor. They sell the pasture now to buy the horse,
Following the mirror of all Christian kings.—Act ii. Prol. 5, 6.

The abuse of distance; force a play:
The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene
Is now transported, gentles, to Southampton;
There is the playhouse now, there must you sit:
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas
To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
We'll not offend one stomach with our play.
But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene. [Exit]
Scene 1. London. A street

Enter Corporal Nym and Lieutenant Bardolph

Bard. Well met, Corporal Nym.

Nym. Good morrow, Lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. What, are Ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little; but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles; but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wink and hold out mine iron: it is a simple one; but what though? it will toast cheese, and it will endure cold as another man's sword will: and there's an end.

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends; and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France: let it be so, good Corporal Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my rest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly: and certainly she did you wrong; for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell: things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and some say knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Hostess

Bard. Here comes Ancient Pistol and his wife: good corporal, be patient here. How now, mine host Pistol!

Pist. Base tike, call'st thou me host?

Now, by this hand, I swear, I scorn the term; Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers. [Nym and Pistol draw Host. O well a day, Lady, if he be not drawn now! we shall see wilful adultery and murder committed.

Bard. Good lieutenant! good corporal! offer nothing here.

Nym. Pish!

Pist. Pish for thee, Iceland dog! thou prick-eared cur of Iceland!

Host. Good corporal Nym, show thy valour, and put up your sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus.

Pist. 'Solus', egregious dog? O viper vile! The 'solus' in thy most mervailous face; The 'solus' in thy teeth, and in thy throat, And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdy, And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth! I do retort the 'solus' in thy bowels; For I can take, and Pistol's cock is up, And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbason; you cannot conjure me. I have an humour to knock you indifferently well. If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may: and that's the humour of it.

Pist. O braggart vile and damned furious wight! The grave doth gape, and doting death is near; Therefore exhale.

Bard. Hear me, hear me what I say: he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts, as I am a soldier.

Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate. Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give; Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms: that is the humour of it.

Pist. 'Couple a gorge!'
That is the word. I thee defy again.
O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?
I have, and I will hold, the quondam Quickly
For the only she; and—pauca, there's enough.
Go to.

Enter the Boy

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master, and you, hostess: he is very sick, and would to bed. Good Bardolph, put thy face between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan. Faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue!

Host. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days. The king has killed his heart. Good husband, come home presently.

[Exeunt Hostess and Boy]

Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together: why the devil should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

Pist. Let floods o'erswell, and fiends for food howl on!

Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. Base is the slave that pays.

Nym. That now I will have: that's the humour of it.

Pist. As manhood shall compound: push home.

[They draw]

Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust, I'll kill him; by this sword, I will.

Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why, then, be enemies with me too. Prithee, put up.
Nym. I shall have my eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. A noble shalt thou have, and present pay;
And liquor likewise will I give to thee,
And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood:
I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me;
Is not this just? for I shall sutler be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.
Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble?
Pist. In cash most justly paid.

Nym. Well, then, that's the humour of't.

Re-enter Hostess

Host. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to Sir John. Ah, poor heart! he is so shaked of a burning quotidiant tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight;
that's the even of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right;
His heart is fracted and corroborate.

Nym. The king is a good king: but it must be as it may: he passes some humours and careers.

Pist. Let us condole the knight; for, lambkins, we will live.

Scene 2. Southampton. A council-chamber

Enter Exeter, Bedford, and Westmoreland

Bed. Fore God, his grace is bold to trust these traitors.

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear themselves!
As if allegiance in their bosoms sat,
Crowned with faith and constant loyalty.
Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend,
By interception which they dream not of.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,
Whom he hath dull’d and cloy’d with gracious favours,
That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell
His sovereign’s life to death and treachery.

_Trumpets sound._ Enter King Henry, Scroop,
Cambridge, Grey, and Attendants

_The King._ Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard.
My Lord of Cambridge, and my kind Lord of Masham,
And you, my gentle knight, give me your thoughts:
Think you not that the powers we bear with us
Will cut their passage through the force of France,
Doing the execution and the act
For which we have in head assembled them?

_Scroop._ No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best.
_The King._ I doubt not that; since we are well persuaded
We carry not a heart with us from hence
That grows not in a fair consent with ours,
Nor leave not one behind that doth not wish
Success and conquest to attend on us.

_Cam._ Never was monarch better fear’d and loved
Than is your majesty: there’s not, I think, a subject
That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness
Under the sweet shade of your government.

_Grey._ True: those that were your father’s enemies
Have steep’d their galls in honey and do serve you
With hearts create of duty and of zeal.

_The King._ We therefore have great cause of thankfulness;
And shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit
According to the weight and worthiness.

_Scroop._ So service shall with steeled sinews toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope,
To do your grace incessant services.

K. Hen. We judge no less. Uncle of Exeter,
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person: we consider
It was excess of wine that set him on;
And on his more advice we pardon him.

Scroop. That's mercy, but too much security:
Let him be punish'd, sovereign, lest example
Breed, by his sufferance, more of such a kind.

K. Hen. O, let us yet be merciful.
Cam. So may your highness, and yet punish too.
Grey. Sir,
You show great mercy, if you give him life,
After the taste of much correction.

K. Hen. Alas, your too much love and care of me
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch!
If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd and digested,
Appear before us? We'll yet enlarge that man,
Though Cambridge, Scroop and Grey, in their dear care
And tender preservation of our person,
Would have him punish'd. And now to our French causes:

Who are the late commissioners?

Cam. I one, my lord:
Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.

Scroop. So did you me, my liege.
Grey. And I, my royal sovereign.

K. Hen. Then, Richard Earl of Cambridge, there is yours;

There yours, Lord Scroop of Masham; and, sir knight,
Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours;
Read them; and know, I know your worthiness.
My Lord of Westmoreland, and uncle Exeter, 70
We will aboard to-night. Why, how now, gentlemen!
What see you in those papers that you lose
So much complexion? Look ye, how they change!
Their cheeks are paper. Why, what read you there,
That hath so cowarded and chased your blood
Out of appearance?
  Cam. I do confess my fault;
And do submit me to your highness' mercy.
  Grey. } To which we all appeal.
  Scroop.

  K. Hen. The mercy that was quick in us but late,
By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd: 80
You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy;
For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,
As dogs upon their masters, worrying you.
See you, my princes and my noble peers,
These English monsters! My Lord of Cambridge here, 85
You know how apt our love was to accord
To furnish him with all appertinents
Belonging to his honour; and this man
Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspired,
And sworn unto the practices of France,
To kill us here in Hampton: to the which
This knight, no less for bounty bound to us
Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn. But, O,
What shall I say to thee, Lord Scroop? thou cruel,
Ingrateful, savage and inhuman creature!
Thou that didst bear the key of all my counsels,
That knew'st the very bottom of my soul,
That almost mightst have coin'd me into gold,
Wouldst thou have practised on me for thy use!
May it be possible, that foreign hire
Could out of thee extract one spark of evil
That might annoy my finger? 'tis so strange,
That, though the truth of it stands off as gross
K. Hen    Why, how now, gentlemen'
What see you in those papers that you lose
So much complexion?    - Act ii. 2. 71-73.
As black and white, my eye will scarcely see it
Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not hoop at them:
But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder to wait on treason and on murder:
And whatsoever cunning fiend it was
That wrought upon thee so preposterously
Hath got the voice in hell for excellence:
All other devils that suggest by treasons
Do botch and bungle up damnation
With patches, colours, and with forms being fetch'd
From glistening semblances of piety;
But he that temper'd thee bade thee stand up,
Gave thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.
If that same demon that hath gull'd thee thus
Should with his lion gait walk the whole world,
He might return to vasty Tartar back,
And tell the legions 'I can never win
A soul so easy as that Englishman's'.
O, how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance! Show men dutiful?
Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned?
Why, so didst thou: come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou: seem they religious?
Why, so didst thou: or are they spare in diet,
Free from gross passion or of mirth or anger,
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood,
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement,
Not working with the eye without the ear,
And but in purged judgment trusting neither?
Such and so finely bolted didst thou seem:
And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
To mark the full-fraught man and best indued
With some suspicion. I will weep for thee;
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fall of man. Their faults are open:
Arrest them to the answer of the law;
And God acquit them of their practices!

Exec. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard Earl of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry
Lord Scroop of Masham.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas
Grey, knight, of Northumberland.

Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd;
And I repent my fault more than my death;
Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.

Cam. For me, the gold of France did not seduce;
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended:
But God be thanked for prevention;
Which I in sufferance heartily will rejoice,
Beseeching God and you to pardon me.

Grey. Never did faithful subject more rejoice
At the discovery of most dangerous treason
Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
Prevented from a damned enterprise:
My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.

K. Hen. God quit you in his mercy! Hear your sentence.

You have conspired against our royal person,
Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd and from his coffers
Received the golden earnest of our death;
Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter.

His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt
And his whole kingdom into desolation.

Touching our person seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
Poor miserable wretches, to your death:
The taste whereof, God of his mercy give
You patience to endure, and true repentance
Of all your dear offences! Bear them hence.

[Exeunt Cambridge, Scroop and Grey, guarded]
Now lords, for France; the enterprise whereof
Shall be to you, as us, like glorious.
We doubt not of a fair and lucky war,
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous treason lurking in our way,
To hinder our beginnings. We doubt not now
But every rub is smoothed on our way.
Then forth, dear countrymen: let us deliver
Our puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.
Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:
No king of England, if not king of France. [Exeunt]

Enter Pistol, Hostess, Nym, Bardolph, and Boy.

Host. Prithee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pist. No; for my manly heart doth yearn.
Bardolph, be blithe: Nym, rouse thy vaunting veins:
Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore.

Bard. Would I were with him, wheresome'er he is, either in heaven or in hell!

Host. Nay, sure, he's not in hell; he's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom. 'A made a finer end and went away an it had been any christom child; 'a parted even just between twelve and one, even at the turning o' the tide: for after I saw him fumble with the sheets and play with flowers and smile upon his fingers' ends, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and 'a babbled of green fields. 'How now, Sir John!' quoth I: 'what, man! be o' good cheer.' So 'a cried out 'God, God, God!' three or four times. Now I, to comfort him, bid him 'a should not think of God; I hoped there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet. So 'a bade me lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and they were as cold as any stone, and so upward and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

_Nym._ They say he cried out of sack.

_Host._ Ay, that 'a did.

_Boy._ Do you not remember, 'a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose, and 'a said it was a black soul burning in hell-fire?

_Bard._ Well, the fuel is gone that maintained that fire: that's all the riches I got in his service.

_Nym._ Shall we shog? the king will be gone from Southampton.

_Pist._ Come, let's away. My love, give me thy lips. Look to my chattels and my movables: Let senses rule; the word is 'Pitch and Pay': Trust none; For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes, And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck: Therefore, Caveto be thy counsellor. Go, clear thy crystals. Yoke-fellows in arms, Let us to France; like horse-leeches, my boys, To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!

_Boy._ And that's but unwholesome food, they say.

_Pist._ Touch her soft mouth, and march. _Bard._ Farewell, hostess. [Kissing her
Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but, adieu.

Host. Farewell; adieu.

Scene 4. France. The King's palace.

Flourish. Enter the French King, the Dauphin, the Dukes of Berri and Bretagne, the Constable, and others.

Fr. King. Thus comes the English with full power upon us;
And more than carefully it us concerns
To answer royally in our defences.
Therefore the Dukes of Berri and of Bretagne,
Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make forth,
And you, Prince Dauphin, with all swift dispatch,
To line and new repair our towns of war
With men of courage and with means defendant;
For England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf.
It fits us then to be as provident
As fear may teach us out of late examples
Left by the fatal and neglected English
Upon our fields.

Dau. My most redoubted father,
It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe;
For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom,
Though war nor no known quarrel were in question,
But that defences, musters, preparations,
Should be maintain'd, assembled and collected,
As were a war in expectation.
Therefore, I say 'tis meet we all go forth
To view the sick and feeble parts of France:
And let us do it with no show of fear;
No, with no more than if we heard that England
Were busied with a Whitsun morris-dance:
For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, Prince Dauphin!
You are too much mistaken in this king:
Question your grace the late ambassadors,
With what great state he heard their embassy,
How well supplied with noble counsellors,
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution,
And you shall find his vanities forespent
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly;
As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots
That shall first spring and be most delicate.

Daup. Well, 'tis not so, my lord high constable;
But though we think it so, it is no matter:
In cases of defence 'tis best to weigh
The enemy more mighty than he seems:
So the proportions of defence are fill'd;
Which of a weak and niggardly projection
Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat with scanting
A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we King Harry strong;
And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him.
The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us;
And he is bred out of that bloody strain
That haunted us in our familiar paths:
Witness our too much memorable shame
When Cressy battle fatally was struck,
And all our princes captivated by the hand
Of that black name, Edward, Black Prince of Wales;
While that his mountain sire, on mountain standing.
Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,
Saw his heroical seed, and smiled to see him,
Mangle the work of nature and deface
The patterns that by God and by French fathers
Had twenty years been made. This is a stem
Of that victorious stock; and let us fear
The native mightiness and fate of him.

Enter a Messenger

Mess. Ambassadors from Harry King of England Do crave admittance to your majesty.
Fr. King. We'll give them present audience. Go, and bring them.

[Exeunt Messenger and certain Lords
You see this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.
Dan. Turn head, and stop pursuit; for coward dogs
Most spend their mouths when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,
Take up the English short, and let them know
Of what a monarchy you are the head:
Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with Exeter and train

Fr. King. From our brother England?
Exe. From him; and thus he greets your majesty.
He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divest yourself, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories that by gift of heaven,
By law of nature and of nations, 'long
To him and to his heirs; namely, the crown
And all wide-stretched honours that pertain
By custom and the ordinance of times Unto the crown of France. That you may know
'Tis no sinister nor no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion raked,
He sends you this most memorable line,
In every branch truly demonstrative;
Willing you overlook this pedigree:
And when you find him evenly derived
From his most famed of famous ancestors,
Edward the Third, he bids you then resign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held
From him the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows?

Exe. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown
Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it:
Therefore in fierce tempest is he coming,
In thunder and in earthquake, like a Jove,
That, if requiring fail, he will compel;
And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,
Deliver up the crown, and to take mercy
On the poor souls for whom this hungry war
Opens his vasty jaws; and on your head
Turning the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,
The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans,
For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers,
That shall be swallow'd in this controversy.
This is his claim, his threatening and my message;
Unless the Dauphin be in presence here,
To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this further:
To-morrow shall you bear our full intent
Back to our brother England.

Dau.

For the Dauphin,
I stand here for him: what to him from England?

Exe. Scorn and defiance; slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misbecome
The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus says my king; an if your father's highness
Do not, in grant of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,
He'll call you to so hot an answer of it,
That caves and womby vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass and return your mock
In second accent of his ordinance.

_Dau._ Say, if my father render fair return,
It is against my will; for I desire
Nothing but odds with England: to that end,
As matching to his youth and vanity,
I did present him with the Paris balls.

_Exe._ He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress-court of mighty Europe:
And, be assured, you'll find a difference,
As we his subjects have in wonder found,
Between the promise of his greener days
And these he masters now: now he weighs time
Even to the utmost grain: that you shall read
In your own losses, if he stay in France.

_Fr. King._ To-morrow shall you know our mind at full.

_Exe._ Dispatch us with all speed, lest that our king
Come here himself to question our delay;
For he is footed in this land already.

_Fr. King._ You shall be soon dispatched with fair conditions:
A night is but small breath and little pause
To answer matters of this consequence.

_[Flourish. Exeunt]_
ACT III

PROLOGUE

Enter Chorus

Chor. Thus with imagined wing our swift scene flies
In motion of no less celerity
Than that of thought. Suppose that you have seen

The well-appointed king at Hampton pier
Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phoebus fanning:
Play with your fancies, and in them behold
Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing:
Hear the shrill whistle which doth order give
To sounds confused; behold the threaden sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,
Breasting the lofty surge: O, do but think
You stand upon the rivage and behold
A city on the inconstant billows dancing;
For so appears this fleet majestical,
Holding due course to Harfleur. Follow, follow:
Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy,
And leave your England, as dead midnight still,
Guarded with grandsires, babies and old women,
Either past or not arrived to pith and puissance;
For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These cull'd and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?
Work, work your thoughts, and therein see a siege;
Behold the ordnance on their carriages,
With fatal mouths gaping on girded Harfleur.
Suppose the ambassador from the French comes back;
Tells Harry that the king doth offer him
Katharine his daughter, and with her, to dowry,
Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.
The offer likes not: and the nimble gunner
With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,

[Alarum, and chambers go off
And down goes all before them. Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind. [Exit

Scene I. France. Before Harfleur

Alarum. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Bedford,
Gloucester, and Soldiers, with scaling-ladders

K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends,
Or close the wall up with our English dead.
In peace there's nothing so becomes a man
As modest stillness and humility:
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage;
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it

As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth and stretch the nostril wide,
Hold hard the breath and bend up every spirit
To his full height. On, on, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof!
Fathers that, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn till even fought
And sheathed their swords for lack of argument:
Dishonour not your mothers; now attest
That those whom you call'd fathers did beget you.
Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war. And you, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
The mettle of your pasture; let us swear
That you are worth your breeding; which I doubt not;
For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot:
Follow your spirit, and upon this charge
Cry 'God for Harry, England, and Saint George!'

[Exeunt. Alarum, and chambers go off

SCENE 2. The same

Enter Nym, Bardolph, Pistol, and Boy

Bard. On, on, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!

Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay: the knocks are too hot; and, for mine own part, I have not a case of lives: the humour of it is too hot, that is the very 5 plain-song of it.

Pist. The plain-song is most just; for humours do abound:
Knocks go and come; God's vassals drop and die;
And sword and shield,
In bloody field,
Doth win immortal fame.

Boy. Would I were in an alehouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale and safety.

Pist. And I:
If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But thither would I hie.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.
Enter Fluellen

Flu. Up to the breach, you dogs! avaunt, you cullions!

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould.
Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage,
Abate thy rage, great duke!
Good bawcock, bate thy rage; use lenity, sweet chuck!

Nym. These be good humours! your honour wins bad humours.

Bay. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashers. I am boy to them all three: but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for indeed three such antics do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-liveried and red-faced; by the means whereof 'a faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol, he hath a killing tongue and a quiet sword; by the means whereof 'a breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym, he hath heard that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he scorns to say his prayers, lest 'a should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are matched with as few good deeds; for 'a never broke any man's head but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal anything, and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three half-pence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in filching, and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel: I knew by that piece of service the men would carry coals. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets as their gloves or their handkerchers: which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service: their villany goes (34849) against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up.

| Exit

Re-enter Fluellen, Gower following

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the Duke of Gloucester would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines; for, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war: the concavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, th' adversary, you may discuss unto the duke, look you, is digt himself four yard under the countermines: by Cheshu, I think 'a will plow up all, if there is not better directions.

Gow. The Duke of Gloucester, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman, a very valiant gentleman, i' faith.

Flu. It is Captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. I think it be.

Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the world: I will verify as much in his beard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy-dog.

Enter Macmorris and Captain Jamy

Gow. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captain, Captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous falorous gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition and knowledge in th' aunchient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Jamy. I say gud-day, Captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, good Captain James.
Gow. How now, Captain Macmorris! have you quit the mines? have the pioners given o'er?

Mac. By Chrish, la! tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trompet sound the retreat. By my hand, I swear, and my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over: I would have blowed up the town, so Chrish save me, la! in an hour: O, tish ill done, tish 90 ill done; by my hand, tish ill done!

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I beseech you now, will you voutsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly to satisfy my opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline; that is the point.

Jamy. It sall be vary gud, gud feith, gud captains 100 bath: and I sall quit you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion; that sall I, marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me: the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes: it is no time to discourse. The town is beseeched, and the trumpet call us to the breach; and we talk, and, be Chrish, do nothing: 'tis shame for us all: so God sa' me, 'tis shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand: and there is throats to be cut, and works to be done; and there ish nothing done, so Chrish sa' me, la!

Jamy. By the mess, ere theise eyes of mine take themselves to slomber, ay'll de gud service, or ay'll lig i' the grund for it; ay, or go to death; and ay'll pay't as valorously as I may, that sall I suerly do, that 115 is the breff and the long. Marry, I wad full fain hear some question 'tween you tway.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation —
Mac. Of my nation! What ish my nation? Ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal—What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation?

Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, "Captain Macmorris, peradventure I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as good a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of war, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself: so Chrish save me, I will cut off your head.

Gow. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Jamy. A! that's a foul fault. [A parley sounded

Gow. The town sounds a parley.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more better opportunity to be required, look you, I will be so bold as to tell you I know the disciplines of war; and there is an end.

[Exeunt

Scene 3. The same. Before the gates

The Governor and some Citizens on the walls; the English forces below.

Enter King Henry and his train

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town? This is the latest parle we will admit:
Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves;
Or like to men proud of destruction
Defy us to our worst: for, as I am a soldier,
A name that in my thoughts becomes me best,
If I begin the battery once again,
I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur
Till in her ashes she lie buried.
The gates of mercy shall be all shut up,
And the flesh'd soldier, rough and hard of heart,
In liberty of bloody hand shall range
With conscience wide as hell, mowing like grass
Your fresh-fair virgins and your flowering infants.
What is it then to me, if impious war,
Array'd in flames like to the prince of fiends,
Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feats
Enlink'd to waste and desolation?
What rein can hold licentious wickedness
When down the hill he holds his fierce career?
We may as bootless spend our vain command
Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil
As send precepts to the leviathan
To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur,
Take pity of your town and of your people,
Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command;
Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace
O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murder, spoil and villany.
If not, why, in a moment look to see
The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand
Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;
Your fathers taken by the silver beards,
And their most reverend heads dash'd to the walls,
Your naked infants spitted upon pikes,
Whiles the mad mothers with their howls confused
Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry
At Herod's bloody-hunting slaugtermen.
What say you? will you yield, and this avoid,
Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?

Guv. Our expectation hath this day an end:
The Dauphin, whom of succours we entreated,
Returns us that his powers are yet not ready
To raise so great a siege. Therefore, great king,
We yield our town and lives to thy soft mercy.
Enter our gates; dispose of us and ours;
For we no longer are defensible.
K. Hen. Open your gates. Come, uncle Exeter, Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain, And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French: Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle, The winter coming on and sickness growing Upon our soldiers, we will retire to Calais. To-night in Harfleur we will be your guest; To-morrow for the march are we addrest. [Flourish. The King and his train enter the town

Scene 4. The French King's palace

Enter Katharine and Alice

Kath. Alice, tu as été en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.
Alice. Un peu, madame.
Kath. Je te prie, m'enseignez; il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appelez-vous la main en Anglois?
Alice. La main? elle est appelée de hand.
Kath. De hand. Et les doigts?
Alice. Les doigts? ma foi, j'oublie les doigts; mais je me souviendrai. Les doigts? je pense qu'ils sont appelés de fingres; oui, de fingres.
Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fingres. Je pense que je suis le bon écolier; j'ai gagné deux mots d'Anglois vitément. Comment appelez-vous les ongles?
Alice. Les ongles? nous les appelons de nails.
Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon Anglois.
Kath. Dites-moi l'Anglois pour le bras.
Alice. De arm, madame.
Kath. Et le coude?
Alice. De elbow.
Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fais la répétition de tous les mots que vous m'avez appris dès à présent.
Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

Kath. Excusez-moi, Alice; écoutez: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arma, de bilbow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu, je m'en oublie! de elbow. Comment appelez-vous le col?

Alice. De neck, madame.

Kath. De nick. Et le menton?

Alice. De chin.

Kath. De sin. Le col, de nick; le menton, de sin.

Alice. Oui. Sauf votre honneur, en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droit que les natifs d'Angleterre.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre, par la grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps.

Alice. N'avez-vous pas déjà oublié ce que je vous ai enseigné?

Kath. Non, je reciterai à vous promptement: de hand, de fingres, de mails,—

Alice. De nails, madame.

Kath. De nails, de arm, de ilbow.

Alice. Sauf votre honneur, de elbow.

Kath. Ainsi dis-je; de elbow, de nick, et de sin. Comment appelez-vous le pied et la robe?

Alice. De foot, madame; et de coun.

Kath. De foot et de coun! O Seigneur Dieu! ces mots de son mauvais, corruptible, gros, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honneur d'user: je ne voudrais prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France pour tout le monde. Foh! le foot et le coun! Néanmoins, je reciterai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble: de hand, de fingres, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de nick, de sin, de foot, de coun.

Alice. Excellent, madame!

Kath. C'est assez pour une fois: allons-nous à diner.

[Exeunt]
Scene 5. The same

Enter the King of France, the Dauphin, the Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. 'Tis certain he hath pass'd the river Somme.

Con. And if he be not fought withal, my lord, Let us not live in France; let us quit all And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Dau. O Dieu vivant! shall a few sprays of us, Our scions, put in wild and savage stock, Spirt up so suddenly into the clouds, And overlook their grafters?

Bour. Normans, but bastard Normans; bastard Normans! Mort de ma vie! if they march along Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom To buy a slobberry and a dirty farm In that nook-shotten isle of Albion.

Con. Dieu de batailles! where have they this mettle? Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull, On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale, Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden water, A drench for sur-rein'd jades, their barley-broth, Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat? And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine, Seem frosty? O, for honour of our land, Let us not hang like roping icicles Upon our houses' thatch, whiles a more frosty people Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields! Poor we may call them in their native lords.

Dau. By faith and honour, Our madams mock at us, and plainly say Our mettle is bred out.

Bour. They bid us to the English dancing-schools,
And teach lavoltas high and swift corantos;
Saying our grace is only in our heels,
And that we are most lofty runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjoy the herald? speed him hence:
Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.
Up, princes! and, with spirit of honour edged
More sharper than your swords, hie to the field:
Charles Delabreth, high constable of France;
You Dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berri,
Alençon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy;
Jacques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,
Beaumont, Grandpré, Roussi, and Fauconberg,
Foix, Lestrale, Bouciqualt, and Charolois;
High dukes, great princes, barons, lords and knights,
For your great seats now quit you of great shames.
Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land
With pennons painted in the blood of Harfleur:
Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow
Upon the valleys, whose low vassal seat
The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon:
Go down upon him, you have power enough,
And in a captive chariot into Rouen
Bring him our prisoner.

Con. This becomes the great.
Sorry am I his numbers are so few,
His soldiers sick and famish'd in their march,
For I am sure, when he shall see our army,
He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear
And for achievement offer us his ransom.

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Montjoy,
And let him say to England that we send
To know what willing ransom he will give.
Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.

Dan. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.
Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us. Now forth, lord constable and princes all, And quickly bring us word of England's fall. [Exeunt 65

Scene 6. The English camp in Picardy

Enter Gower and Fluellen, meeting

Gow. How now, Captain Fluellen! come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent services committed at the bridge.

Gow. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and a man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my uttermost power: he is not—God be praised and blessed!—any hurt in the world; but keeps the bridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an aunchient lieutenant there at the pridge, I think in my very conscience he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony; and he is a man of no estimation in the world; but I did see him do as gallant service.

Gow. What do you call him?

Flu. He is called Aunchient Pistol.

Gow. I know him not.

Enter Pistol

Flu. Here is the man.

Pist. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours: The Duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise God; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a soldier, firm and sound of heart. And of buxom valour, hath, by cruel fate, And giddy Fortune's furious fickle wheel,
That goddess blind,
That stands upon the rolling restless stone—

Flu. By your patience, Aunchient Pistol. Fortune is painted blind, with a muffler afore her eyes, to signify to you that Fortune is blind; and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and mutability, and variation: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls: in good truth, the poet makes a most excellent description of it: Fortune is an excellent moral.

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph’s foe, and frowns on him; For he hath stolen a pax, and hanged must 'a be: A damned death!

Let gallows gape for dog; let man go free
And let not hemp his wind-pipe suffocate:
But Exeter hath given the doom of death
For pax of little price.
Therefore, go speak: the duke will hear thy voice;
And let not Bardolph’s vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord and vile reproach:
Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee requite.

Flu. Aunchient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Pist. Why then, rejoice therefore.

Flu. Certainly, aunchient, it is not a thing to rejoice at: for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure, and put him to execution; for discipline ought to be used.

Pist. Die and be damn’d! and figo for thy friendship!

Flu. It is well.

Pist. The fig of Spain! [Exit

Flu. Very good.

Gov. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal; I remember him now; a cutpurse.

Flu. I’ll assure you, 'a uttered as prave words at the Fis. Ding and be damned! and hang for thy friendship!

Flu. It is well

Fis. The fig of Spain!

Flu. Very good. — Act iii. 6. 50-59.
pridge as you shall see in a summer's day. But it is very well; what he has spoke to me, that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue, that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself at his return into London under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders' names: and they will learn you by rote where services were done; at such and such a sconce, at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on; and this they can perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with new-tuned oaths: and what a beard of the general's cut and a horrid suit of the camp will do among foaming bottles and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such slanders of the age, or else you may be marvellously mistook.

Flu. I tell you what, Captain Gower; I do perceive he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the world he is: if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him my mind. [Drum heard.] Hark you, the king is coming, and I must speak with him from the pridge.

_Drum and colours._ Enter King Henry, Gloucester, and Soldiers

God pless your majesty!

_K. Hen._ How now, Fluellen! camest thou from the bridge?

Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The Duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pridge: the French is gone off, look you; and there is gallant and most prave passages; marry, th' adversary was have possession of the pridge; but he is enforced to retire, and the Duke of Exeter is master of the pridge: I can tell your majesty, the duke is a prave man.
K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th' adversary hath been very great, reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church, one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubukles, and welks, and knobs, and flames o' fire: and his lips blows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes blue and sometimes red; but his nose is executed, and his fire's out.

K. Hen. We would have all such offenders so cut off: and we give express charge, that in our marches through the country, there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for, none of the French upbraided or abused in disdainful language; for when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket. Enter Montjoy

Mont. You know me by my habit.

K. Hen. Well then I know thee: what shall I know of thee?

Mont. My master's mind.

K. Hen. Unfold it.

Mont. Thus says my king: Say thou to Harry of England: Though we seemed dead, we did but sleep: advantage is a better soldier than rashness. Tell him we could have rebuked him at Harfleur, but that we thought not good to bruise an injury till it were full ripe: now we speak upon our cue, and our voice is imperial: England shall repent his folly, see his weakness, and admire our sufferance. Bid him therefore consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under. For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add defiance: and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master; so much my office.

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mont. Montjoy.

K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back,
And tell thy king I do not seek him now;
But could be willing to march on to Calais
Without impeachment: for, to say the sooth,
Though 'tis no wisdom to confess so much
Unto an enemy of craft and vantage,
My people are with sickness much enfeebled,
My numbers lessened, and those few I have Almost no better than so many French;
Who when they were in health, I tell thee, herald,
I thought upon one pair of English legs
Did march three Frenchmen. Yet, forgive me, God,
That I do brag thus! This your air of France
Hath blown that vice in me; I must repent.
Go therefore, tell thy master here I am;
My ransom is this frail and worthless trunk,
My army but a weak and sickly guard;
Yet, God before, tell him we will come on,
Though France himself and such another neighbour
Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy.
Go, bid thy master well advise himself:
If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd,
We shall your tawny ground with your red blood
Discolour: and so, Montjoy, fare you well.
The sum of all our answer is but this:
We would not seek a battle, as we are;
Nor, as we are, we say we will not shun it:
So tell your master.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness. [Exit

Glou. I hope they will not come upon us now.

K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs.

March to the bridge; it now draws towards night:
Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves,
And on to-morrow bid them march away. [Exit

Scene 7. The French camp near Agincourt

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Rambures, Orleans, Dauphin, with others

Con. I have the best armour of the world. Would it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning!

Dau. My Lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armour?

Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince in the world.

Dau. What a long night is this! I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasterns. Ça, ha! he bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs; le cheval volant, the Pegasus, chez les narines de feu! When I bestride him, I soar, I am a hawk: he trots the air; the earth sings when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

Dau. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness while his rider mounts him: he is indeed a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

(MSP19)

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea: turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world, familiar to us and unknown, to lay apart their particular functions and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise and begun thus: 'Wonder of nature',—

Ram. My lord constable, the armour that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars or suns upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be, for you bear a many superfluously, and 't were more honour some were away.

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well, were some of your brags dis-mounted.

Dau. Would I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: but I would it were morning; for I would fain be about the ears of the English.
Ram. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty prisoners?
Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.
Dan. 'Tis midnight; I'll go arm myself. [Exit
Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.
Ram. He longs to eat the English.
Con. I think he will eat all he kills.
Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.
Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.
Orl. He is simply the most active gentleman of France.
Con. Doing is activity; and he will still be doing.
Orl. He never did harm, that I heard of.
Con. Nor will do none to-morrow: he will keep that good name still.
Orl. I know him to be valiant.
Con. I was told that by one that knows him better than you.
Orl. What is he?
Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said he cared not who knew it.
Orl. He needs not; it is no hidden virtue in him.
Con. By my faith, sir, but it is; never anybody saw it but his lackey: 'tis a hooded valour; and when it appears, it will bite.
Orl. Ill will never said well.
Con. I will cap that proverb with 'There is flattery in friendship'.
Orl. I will take up that with 'Give the devil his due'.
Con. Well placed: there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb with 'A pox of the devil'.
Orl. You are the better at proverbs, by how much 'A fool's bolt is soon shot'.
Con. You have shot over.
Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

Enter a Messenger

Mess. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tents.
Con. Who hath measured the ground?
Mess. The Lord Grandpré.
Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman. Would it were day! Alas, poor Harry of England! he longs not for the dawning as we do.
Orl. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge!
Con. If the English had any apprehension, they would run away.
Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.
Ram. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.
Orl. Foolish curs, that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear and have their heads crushed like rotten apples! You may as well say, that's a valiant flea that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.
Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming on, leaving their wits with their wives: and then give them great meals of beef and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves and fight like devils.
Orl. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.
Con. Then shall we find to-morrow they have only stomachs to eat and none to fight. Now it is time to arm: come, shall we about it?
Orl. It is now two o'clock: but, let me see, by ten
We shall have each a hundred Englishmen. [Exeunt

ACT IV
PROLOGUE

Enter Chorus

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time
When creeping murmurs and the poring dark
Fills the wide vessel of the universe.
From camp to camp through the foul womb of night
The hum of either army stilly sounds,
That the fix'd sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch:
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face;
Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs
Piercing the night's dull car; and from the tents
The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation:
The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning name.
Proud of their numbers and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night
Who, like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away. The poor condemned English,
Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
Sit patiently and inly ruminate
The morning's danger, and their gesture sad
Investing lank-lean cheeks and war-worn coats
Chor. Proud of their numbers and secure in soul.
The confident and over-lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice.—(Act iv. Prol. 17-19.)
Presenteth them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. O now, who will behold
The royal captain of this ruin'd band
Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent,
Let him cry 'Praise and glory on his head!'
For forth he goes and visits all his host,
Bids them good-morrow with a modest smile
And calls them brothers, friends and countrymen.
Upon his royal face there is no note
How dread an army hath enrounded him;
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watched night,
But freshly looks and over-bears attaint
With cheerful semblance and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks:
A largess universal like the sun
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear, that mean and gentle all
Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night.
And so our scene must to the battle fly;
Where—O for pity!—we shall much disgrace
With four or five most vile and ragged foils,
Right ill-disposed in brawl ridiculous,
The name of Agincourt. Yet sit and see,
Minding true things by what their mockeries be. [Exit

Scene I. The English camp at Agincourt

Enter King Henry, Bedford, and Gloucester

K. Hen. Gloucester, 'tis true that we are in great danger;
The greater therefore should our courage be.
Good morrow, brother Bedford. God Almighty!
There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out.
For our bad neighbours make us early stirrers,
Which is both healthful and good husbandry:
Besides, they are our outward consciences,
And preachers to us all, admonishing
That we should dress us fairly for our end.
Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
And make a moral of the devil himself.

_Enter Erpingham_

Good morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft pillow for that good white head
Were better than a churlish turf of France.

   _Erp._ Not so, my liege: this lodging likes me better,
Since I may say 'Now lie I like a king'.

   _K. Hen._ 'Tis good for men to love their present pains
Upon example; so the spirit is eased:
And when the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave and newly move,
With casted slough and fresh legerity.
Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas. Brothers both,
Commend me to the princes in our camp;
Do my good morrow to them, and anon
Desire them all to my pavilion.

   _Glou._ We shall, my liege.
   _Erp._ Shall I attend your grace?
   _K. Hen._ No, my good knight;
Go with my brothers to my lords of England:
I and my bosom must debate a while,
And then I would no other company.

   _Erp._ The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry!

   _K. Hen._ God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speak'st cheerfully.
K. Hen. What are you?
Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.—[Act iv. i. 41, 42.]

Enter Pistol

Pist. Qui va là?
K. Hen. A friend.
Pist. Discuss unto me; art thou officer?
Or art thou base, common and popular?
K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.
Pist. Trail’st thou the puissant pike?
K. Hen. Even so. What are you?
Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.
K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.
Pist. The king’s a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame;
Of parents good, of fist most valiant.
I kiss his dirty shoe, and from heart-string
I love the lovely bully. What is thy name?
Pist. Le Roy! a Cornish name: art thou of Cornish crew?
K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.
Pist. Know’st thou Fluellen?
K. Hen. Yes.
Pist. Tell him, I’ll knock his leek about his pate
Upon Saint Davy’s day.
K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.
Pist. Art thou his friend?
K. Hen. And his kinsman too.
Pist. The figo for thee, then!
K. Hen. I thank you: God be with you!
Pist. My name is Pistol call’d.
K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen and Gower

Gow. Captain Fluellen!
Flu. So! in the name of Jesu Christ, speak lower. It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and aunchient prerogatifes and laws of the wars is not kept: if you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle nor pibble pabble in Pompey’s camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you hear him all night.

Flu. If the enemy is an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass and a fool and a prating coxcomb? in your own conscience, now?

Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you and beseech you that you will.

[Exeunt Gower and Fluellen]

K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion, There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter three soldiers, John Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be; but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it. Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

Will. A good old commander and a most kind gentle-man: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

K. Hen. No; nor it is not meet he should. For, though I speak it to you, I think the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; the element shows to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing. Therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are; yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

_Bates._ He may show what outward courage he will; but I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

_K. Hen._ By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think he would not wish himself anywhere but where he is.

_Bates._ Then I would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men's lives saved.

_K. Hen._ I dare say you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone, howsoever you speak this to feel other men's minds: methinks I could not die anywhere so contented as in the king's company; his cause being just and his quarrel honourable.

_Will._ That's more than we know.

_Bates._ Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects: if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

_Will._ But if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make, when all those legs and arms and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day and cry all 'We died at such a place'; some swearing, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children.
rawly left. I am afeard there are few die well that die in a battle; for how can they charitably dispose of anything, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; whom to disobey were against all proportion of subjection.

K. Hen. So, if a son that is by his father sent about merchandise do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers and die in many irreconciled iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation; but this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers: some peradventure have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished for beforebreach of the king's laws in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish: then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own-
Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience: and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost wherein such preparation was gained: and in him that escapes, it were not sin to think that, making God so free an offer, He let him outlive that day to see His greatness and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head, the king is not to answer it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Hen. I myself heard the king say he would not be ransomed.

Will. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully: but when our throats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we ne'er the wiser.

K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then. That's a perilous shot out of an elder-gun, that a poor and a private displeasure can do against a monarch! you may as well go about to turn the sun to ice with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after! come, 't is a foolish saying.

K. Hen. Your reproof is something too round: I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.

K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou darest acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove: give me another of thine.

K. Hen. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou
K. Hen.

O hard condition,

Twin born with greatness, subject to the breath

Of every fool, whose sense no more can feel come to me and say, after to-morrow, ‘This is my glove’, by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou darest as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king’s company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends: we have French quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon.

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one, they will beat us; for they bear them on their shoulders: but it is no English treason to cut French crowns, and to-morrow the king himself will be a clipper.

[Exeunt Soldiers

Upon the king! let us our lives, our souls, Our debts, our careful wives, Our children and our sins lay on the king! We must bear all. O hard condition, Twin-born with greatness, subject to the breath Of every fool, whose sense no more can feel But his own wringing! What infinite heart’s-ease Must kings neglect, that private men enjoy!

And what have kings, that privates have not too, Save ceremony, save general ceremony?

And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?

What kind of god art thou, that suffer’st more Of mortal griefs than do thy worshippers?

What are thy rents? what are thy comings in?

O ceremony, show me but thy worth!

What is thy soul of adoration?

Art thou aught else but place, degree and form, Creating awe and fear in other men?

Wherein thou art less happy being fear’d Than they in fearing.

What drink’st thou oft, instead of homage sweet,
But poison'd flattery? O, be sick, great great
And bid thy ceremony give thee cure!
Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?
Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee,
Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream,
Thou play'st so subtly with a king's repose;
I am a king that find thee, and I know
'Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The intertissued robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running 'fore the king,
The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp
That beats upon the high shore of this world,
No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,
Not all these, laid in bed majestical,
Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave,
Who with a body fill'd and vacant mind
Gets him to rest, cram'md with distressful bread;
Never sees horrid night, the child of hell,
But, like a lackey, from the rise to set
Sweats in the eye of Phoebus and all night
Sleeps in Elysium; next day after dawn,
Doth rise and help Hyperion to his horse,
And follows so the ever-running year,
With profitable labour, to his grave:
And, but for ceremony, such a wretch,
Winding up days with toil and nights with sleep,
Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king.
The slave, a member of the country's peace
Enjoys it; but in gross' brain little wots
What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,
Whose hours the peasant best advantages.
Enter Erpingham
glove. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence, seek through your camp to find you.

K. Hen. Good old knight, Collect them all together at my tent: I'll be before thee.

Erp. I shall do't, my lord. [Exit

K. Hen. O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts; Possess them not with fear; take from them now The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers Pluck their hearts from them. Not to-day, O Lord, O, not to-day, think not upon the fault My father made in compassing the crown! I Richard's body have interred new; And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears Than from it issued forced drops of blood: Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay, Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold up Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built Two chantries, where the sad and solemn priests Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do; Though all that I can do is nothing worth, Since that my penitence comes after all, Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester

Glou. My liege!

K. Hen. My brother Gloucester's voice? Ay; I know thy errand, I will go with thee: The day, my friends and all things stay for me.

[Exeunt

Scene 2. The French camp

Enter the Dauphin, Orleans, Rambures, and others

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords! Dau. Monteza cheval! My horse! varlet! laquais! ha!
Orl. O brave spirit!
Dan. Via! les eaux et la terre.
Orl. Rien puis? l’air et le feu.

Enter Constable

Now, my lord constable!
Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh!
Dan. Mount them, and make incision in their hides, That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And doute them with superfluous courage, ha!
Dan. What, will you have them weep our horses’ blood?
How shall we, then, behold their natural tears?

Enter Messenger

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.
Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse.
Do but behold you poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins
To give each naked curtle-axe a stain,
That our fair gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheathe for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,
The vapour of our valour will o’erturn them.
’Tis positive ’gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a biding foe,
Though we upon this mountain’s basis by Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honours must not. What's to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket sonance and the note to mount;
For our approach shall so much dare the field
That England shall couch down in fear and yield.

_Ello Grandpré_

_Grand._ Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?
Yon island carrions, desperate of their bones,
Ill-favouredly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully:
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps:
The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hand; and their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips,
The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouths the gimmal bit
Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
And their executors, the knavish crows,
Fly o'er them, all impatient for their hour.
Description cannot suit itself in words
To demonstrate the life of such a battle
In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

_Con._ They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

_Dau._ Shall we go send them dinners and fresh suits
And give their fasting horses provender,
And after fight them?

_Con._ I stay but for my guidon: to the field!
I will the banner from a trumpet take,
And use it for my haste. Come, come, away!
The sun is high, and we outwear the day.  _[Exeunt_
Scene 3.  The English camp

Enter Gloucester, Bedford, Exeter,ERPINGHAM, with all his host: Salisbury and Westmoreland

Glou. Where is the king?
Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.
West. Of fighting men they have full three score thousand.
Exe. There's five to one; besides, they all are fresh.
Sal. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.

God be wi' you, princes all; I'll to my charge:
If we no more meet till we meet in heaven,
Then, joyfully, my noble Lord of Bedford,
My dear Lord Gloucester, and my good Lord Exeter,
And my kind kinsman, warriors all, adieu!

Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!
Exe. Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it,
For thou art framed of the firm truth of valour.

| Exit Salisbury |

Bed. He is as full of valour as of kindness;
Princely in both.

Enter the King

West. O that we now had here
But one ten thousand of those men in England
That do no work to-day!

K. Hen. What's he that wishes so?
My cousin Westmoreland? No, my fair cousin:
If we are mark'd to die, we are enow
To do our country loss; and if to live,
The fewer men, the greater share of honour.
God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold,
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost;
It yearns me not if men my garments wear;
Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
But if it be a sin to covet honour,
I am the most offending soul alive.
No, faith, my coz, wish not a man from England:
God's peace! I would not lose so great an honour
As one man more, methinks, would share from me
For the best hope I have. O, do not wish one more!
Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,
That he which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart; his passport shall be made
And crowns for convoy put into his purse:
We would not die in that man's company
That fears his fellowship to die with us.
This day is called the feast of Crispian:
   He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is named,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian.
He that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say 'To-morrow is Saint Crispian':
Then will he strip his sleeve and show his scars,
And say 'These wounds I had on Crispin's day'.
Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But he'll remember with advantages
What feats he did that day: then shall our names,
Familiar in his mouth as household words,
Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloucester,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.
This story shall the good man teach his son;
And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remembered;
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
For he to-day that sheds his blood with me
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition:
And gentlemen in England now a-bed
Shall think themselves accursed they were not here,
And hold their manhoods cheap whiles any speaks
That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day.

Re-enter Salisbury

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:
The French are bravely in their battles set,
And will with all expedition charge on us.
K. Hen. All things are ready, if our minds be so.
West. Perish the man whose mind is backward now!
K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England, coz?
West. God's will! my liege, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle!
K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;
Which likes me better than to wish us one.
You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter Montjoy

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, King Harry,
If for thy ransom thou wilt now compound,
Before thy most assured overthrow:
For certainly thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be englutted. Besides, in mercy,
The constable desires thee thou wilt mind
Thy followers of repentance; that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies
Must lie and fester.
K. Hen. Who hath sent thee now?
Mont. The Constable of France.
K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer back: 90
Bid them achieve me and then sell my bones.
Good God! why should they mock poor fellows thus?
The man that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast lived, was killed with hunting him.
A many of our bodies shall no doubt
Find native graves; upon the which, I trust,
Shall witness live in brass of this day's work:
And those that leave their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills,
They shall be famed; for there the sun shall greet them, 100
And draw their honours reeking up to heaven;
Leaving their earthly parts to choke your cline,
The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.
Mark then abounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.
Let me speak proudly: tell the constable
We are but warriors for the working-day;
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host—
Good argument, I hope, we will not fly—
And time hath worn us into slovenry:
But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim;
And my poor soldiers tell me, yet ere night
They'll be in fresher robes, or they will pluck
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads
And turn them out of service. If they do this,— 120
As, if God please, they shall,—my ransom then
Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labour;
Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald:
They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints;
Which if they have as I will leave 'em them,
Shall yield them little, tell the constable.
K. Hen. I pray thee, hear my former answer back:
Bid them achieve me and then sell my bones.—Act iv, 3. 90, 91.
Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee well: Thou never shalt hear herald any more. Exit K. Hen. I fear thou'lt once more come again for ransom.

Enter York

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg The leading of the vaward.
K. Hen. Take it, brave York. Now, soldiers, march away:
And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day! [Exeunt

Scene 4. The field of battle

Alarum. Excursions. Enter Pistol, French Soldier, and Boy

Pist. Yield, cur!
Fr. Sol. Je pense que vous êtes gentilhomme de bonne qualité.
Pist. Qualtitie calmie custure me! Art thou a gentleman? what is thy name? discuss.
Fr. Sol. O Seigneur Dieu!
Pist. O, Signieur Dew should be a gentleman:
Perpend my words, O Signieur Dew, and mark;
O Signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox,
Except, O signieur, thou do give to me
Egregious ransom.
Fr. Sol. O, prenez miséricorde! ayez pitié de moi!
Pist. Moy shall not serve; I will have forty moys;
Or I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat
In drops of crimson blood.
Fr. Sol. Est-il impossible d'échapper la force de ton bras?
Pist. Brass, cur!
Thou damned and luxurious mountain goat,
Offer'st me brass?
Fr. Sol. O pardonnez moi!
Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of moys?
Come hither, boy: ask me this slave in French. What is his name.

Boy. Écoutez: comment êtes-vous appelé?

Fr. Sol. Monsieur le Fer.

Boy. He says his name is Master Fer.

Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and fir!< him, and ferret him: discuss the same in French unto him.

---

Boy. He prays you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house.

— Act iv. 4. 44. 45.)

Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret, 30 and firk.

Pist. Bid him prepare; for I will cut his throat.

Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, monsieur?

Boy. Il me commande de vous dire que vous faites vous prêt; car ce soldat ici est disposé tout à cette 35 heure de couper votre gorge.

Pist. Owy, cuppele gorge, permafoy, Peasant, unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns; Or mangled shalt thou be by this my sword.

Fr. Sol. O, je vous supplie, pour l'amour de Dieu, 40 me pardonner! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne maison: gardez ma vie, et je vous donnerai deux cents écus.

_Pist._ What are his words?

_Boy._ He prays you to save his life: he is a gentleman of a good house; and for his ransom he will give you two hundred crowns.

_Pist._ Tell him my fury shall abate, and I The crowns will take.

_Fr. Sol._ Petit monsieur, que dit-il?

_Boy._ Encore qu'il est contre son jurement de par- donner aucun prisonnier, néanmoins, pour les écus que vous l'avez promis, il est content de vous donner la liberté, le franchisement.

_Fr. Sol._ Sur mes genoux je vous donne mille re- merciments; et je m'estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, vaillant, et très distingué seigneur d'Angleterre.

_Pist._ Expound unto me, boy.

_Boy._ He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks; and he esteems himself happy that he hath fallen into the hands of one, as he thinks, the most brave, valorous, and thrice-worthy signieur of England.

_Pist._ As I suck blood, I will some mercy show. Follow me!

_Boy._ Suivez-vous le grand capitaine. [Exeunt Pistol and French Soldier.] I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart: but the saying is true, 'The empty vessel makes the greatest sound'. Bardolph and Nym had ten times more valour than this roaring devil i' the old play, that every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger; and they are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal anything adventurously. I must stay with the lackeys, with the luggage of our camp: the French might have a good prey of us, if he knew of it; for there is none to guard it but boys. [Exit
Scene 5. Another part of the field

Enter Constable, Orleans, Bourbon, Dauphin, and Rambures

Con. O diable!
Orl. O seigneur! Le jour est perdu, tout est perdu!
Dau. Mort de ma vie! All is confounded, all!

Reproach and everlasting shame
Sits mocking in our plumes. O méchante fortune!

Do not run away.

[A short alarum]

Con. Why, all our ranks are broke.
Dau. O perdurable shame! Let’s stab ourselves.

Be these the wretches that we play’d at dice for?

Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom?
Bour. Shame and eternal shame, nothing but shame!

Let us die in honour: once more back again.

Con. Disorder, that hath spoil’d us, friend us now!

Let us on heaps go offer up our lives.

Orl. We are enow yet living in the field

To smother up the English in our throngs,

If any order might be thought upon.

Bour. The devil take order now! I’ll to the throng:

Let life be short; else shame will be too long.

[Exeunt]

Scene 6. Another part of the field

Alarums. Enter King Henry and forces, Exeter, and others

K. Hen. Well have we done, thrice valiant country-men:

But all’s not done; yet keep the French the field.

Exe. The Duke of York commends him to your majesty.

K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle? thrice within this hour

I saw him down; thrice up again, and fighting;
From helmet to the spur all blood he was.

_Exec_. In which array, brave soldier, doth he lie,
Larding the plain; and by his bloody side,
Yoke-fellow to his honour-owing wounds,
The noble Earl of Suffolk also lies.

Suffolk first died: and York, all haggled over,
Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteep'd,
And takes him by the beard; kisses the gashes
That bloodily did yawn upon his face;
And cries aloud 'Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk!
My soul shall thine keep company to heaven;
Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abreast,
As in this glorious and well-foughten field
We kept together in our chivalry!'

Upon these words I came and cheer'd him up:
He smiled me in the face, raught me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says 'Dear my lord,
Commend my service to my sovereign'.
So did he turn and over Suffolk's neck
He threw his wounded arm and kiss'd his lips;
And so espoused to death, with blood he seal'd
A testament of noble-ending love.
The pretty and sweet manner of it forced
Those waters from me which I would have stopp'd;
But I had not so much of man in me,
And all my mother came into mine eyes
And gave me up to tears.

_Recip_. I blame you not;
For, hearing this, I must perforce compound
With mistful eyes, or they will issue too. _[Alarum_

But, hark! what new alarum is this same?
The French have reinforced their scatter'd men:
Then every soldier kill his prisoners;
Give the word through. _[Exeunt_
Scene 7. Another part of the field

Enter Fluellen and Gower

Flu. Kill the poys and the luggage! 'tis expressly against the law of arms: 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offer't; in your conscience, now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certain there's not a boy left alive; and the cowardly rascals that ran from the battle ha' done this slaughter: besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent; wherefore the king, most worthily, hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. O, 'tis a gallant king!

Flu. Ay, he was born at Monmouth, Captain Gower. What call you the town's name where Alexander the Pig was born?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig great? the pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think Alexander the Great was born in Macedonia: his father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think it is in Macedonia where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain, if you look in the maps of the 'orld, I warrant you sall find, in the comparisons between Macedonia and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedonia; and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth: it is called Wye at Monmouth: but it is out of my prains what is the name of the other river; but 'tis all one, 'tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander, God knows, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his cholers, and his moods, and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicates in his prains, did, in his ales and his angers look you, kill his best friend, Cleitus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that: he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finished. I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: as Alexander killed his friend Cleitus, being in his ales and his cups; so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgements, turned away the fat knight with the great-belly doublet: he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaveries, and mocks; I have forgot his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he: I'll tell you there is good men porn at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

---

Alarum. Enter King Henry, and forces; Warwick, Gloucester, Exeter, and others

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France Until this instant. Take a trumpet, herald; Ride thou unto the horsemen on yon hill: If they will fight with us, bid them come down, Or void the field; they do offend our sight: If they'll do neither, we will come to them, And make them skirr away, as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings: Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have, And not a man of them that we shall take Shall taste our mercy. Go and tell them so.
Enter Montjoy

Exe. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.
Glo. His eyes are humbler than they used to be.
K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald? know'st thou not
That I have fined these bones of mine for ransom?
Comest thou again for ransom?
Mont. No, great king:
I come to thee for charitable license,
That we may wander o'er this bloody field
To look our dead, and then to bury them;
To sort our nobles from our common men.
For many of our princes—woe the while!—
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood;
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes; and their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,
Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king,
To view the field in safety and dispose
Of their dead bodies!
K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald,
I know not if the day be ours or no;
For yet a many of your horsemen peer
And gallop o'er the field.
Mont. The day is yours.
K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength, for it!
What is this castle call'd that stands hard by?
Mont. They call it Agincourt.
K. Hen. Then call we this the field of Agincourt,
Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.
Flm. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the Black Prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most brave pattle here in France.
(3.6.19)
K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true: if your majesties is remembered of it, the Welshmen did good service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty know, to this hour is an honourable badge of the service; and I do believe your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour; For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welsh plood out of your body, I can tell you that: God pless it and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Jeshu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the world: I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be God, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so! Our heralds go with him: Bring me just notice of the numbers dead On both our parts. Call yonder fellow hither.

[Points to Williams. Exeunt Heralds with Montjoy Exec. Soldier, you must come to the king.

K. Hen. Soldier, why wearest thou that glove in thy cap?

Will. An't please your majesty, 't is the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman?

Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, if alive and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' th' ear: or if I can see my glove in his cap, which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear if alive, I will strike it out soundly.
K. Hen. What think you, Captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a craven and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience.

K. Hen. It may be his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as good a gentleman as the devil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath: if he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain and a Jacksauce, as ever his black shoe trod upon God's ground and his earth, in my conscience, la!

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meetest the fellow.

Will. So I will, my liege, as I live.

K. Hen. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under Captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a good captain, and is good knowledge and literated in the wars.

K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my liege. [Exit

K. Hen. Here, Fluellen; wear thou this favour for me and stick it in thy cap: when Alençon and myself were down together, I plucked this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alençon, and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost me love.

Flu. Your grace doo's me as great honours as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove; that is all; but I would fain see it once, an please God of his grace that I might see.

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?

Flu. He is my dear friend, an please you.
K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him. [Exit K. Hen.]

K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick and my brother Gloucester,
Follow Fluellen closely at the heels:
The glove which I have given him for a favour
May haply purchase him a box o' th' ear;
It is the soldier's; I by bargain should Wear it myself. Follow, good cousin Warwick:
If that the soldier strike him, as I judge
By his blunt bearing he will keep his word,
Some sudden mischief may arise of it;
For I do know Fluellen valiant
And, touch'd with choler, hot as gunpowder,
And quickly will return an injury:
Follow, and see there be no harm between them.
Go you with me, uncle of Exeter. [Exeunt]

Scene 8. Before King Henry's pavilion

Enter Gower and Williams

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, captain.

Enter Fluellen

Flu. God's will and his pleasure, captain, I beseech you now, come apace to the king: there is more good toward you peradventure than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove?

Flu. Know the glove! I know the glove is a glove.

Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it. [Strikes him

Flu. 'S blood! an arrant traitor as any is in the universal world, or in France, or in England!

Gow. How now, sir! you villain!
Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand away, Captain Gower; I will give treason his payment into plows, I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That's a lie in thy throat. I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him: he's a friend of the Duke Alençon's.

_Enter Warwick and Gloucester_

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwick, here is—praised be God for it!—a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

_Enter King Henry and Exeter_

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter?

Flu. My liege, here is a villain and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is taken out of the helmet of Alençon.

Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it; and he that I gave it to in change promised to wear it in his cap: I promised to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now, saving your majesty's manhood, what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lousy knave it is: I hope your majesty is pear me testimony and witness, and will avouchment, that this is the glove of Alençon, that your majesty is give me; in your conscience, now.

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier: look, here is the fellow of it.

'Twas I, indeed, thou promised'st to strike;
And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. And please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world.
K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my lord, come from the heart: never came any from mine that might offend your majesty.

K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse.

Will. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you take it for your own fault and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me.

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with crowns,
And give it to this fellow. Keep it, fellow;
And wear it for an honour in thy cap
Till I do challenge it. Give him the crowns:
And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his belly. Hold, there is twelve pence for you; and I pray you to serve God, and keep you out of prawls, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the better for you.

Will. I will none of your money.

Flu. It is with a good will; I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes: come, wherefore should you be so pashful? your shoes is not so good: 'tis a good silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter an English Herald

K. Hen. Now, herald, are the dead number'd?

Her. Here is the number of the slaughter'd French.

K. Hen. What prisoners of good sort are taken, uncle?

Exe. Charles Duke of Orleans, nephew to the king; John Duke of Bourbon, and Lord Bouciqualt:
Of other lords and barons, knights and squires,
Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.

K. Hen. This note doth tell me of ten thousand French
That in the field lie slain: of princes, in this number,
And nobles bearing banners, there lie dead
One hundred twenty six: added to these,
Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen,
Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which,
Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd knights:
So that, in these ten thousand they have lost,
There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries;
The rest are princes, barons, lords, knights, squires,
And gentlemen of blood and quality.
The names of those their nobles that lie dead:
Charles Delabreth, high constable of France;
Jacques of Chatillon, admiral of France;
The master of the cross-bows, Lord Rambures;
Great Master of France, the brave Sir Guichard
Dolphin,
John Duke of Alençon, Anthony Duke of Brabant,
The brother to the Duke of Burgundy,
And Edward Duke of Bar: of lusty earls,
Grandpré and Roussi, Fauconberg and Foix,
Beaumont and Marle, Vaudemont and Lestrale.
Here was a royal fellowship of death!
Where is the number of our English dead?

Edward the Duke of York, the Earl of Suffolk,
Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam, esquire:
None else of name; and of all other men
But live and twenty. O God, thy arm was here;
And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all! When, without stratagem,
But in plain shock and even play of battle,
Was ever known so great and little loss.
On one part and on the other? Take it, God,
For it is none but thine!

_Exe._ 'Tis wonderful!

_K. Hen._ Come, go we in procession to the village:
And be it death proclaimed through our host
To boast of this or take that praise from God
Which is his only.

_Flu._ Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

_K. Hen._ Yes, captain; but with this acknowledgement,
That God fought for us.

_Flu._ Yes, my conscience, he did us great good.

_K. Hen._ Do we all holy rites;
Let there be sung 'Non nobis' and 'Te Deum';
The dead with charity enclosed in clay:
And then to Calais; and to England then;
Where ne'er from France arrived more happy men.

———

ACT V

PROLOGUE

_Enter Chorus_

Chor. Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story,
That I may prompt them: and of such as have,
I humbly pray them to admit the excuse
Of time, of numbers and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life
Be here presented. Now we bear the king Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Behold, the English beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys,
Whose shouts and claps out-voice the deep-mouth'd sea,
Which like a mighty whiffler 'fore the king
Seems to prepare his way: so let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London.
So swift a pace hath thought that even now
You may imagine him upon Blackheath;
Where that his lords desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city: he forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride;
Giving full trophy, signal and ostent
Quite from himself to God. But now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens!
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of the antique Rome,
With the plebeians swarming at their heels,
Go forth and fetch their conquering Caesar in:
As, by a lower but loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached on his sword,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him! much more, and much more cause,
Did they this Harry. Now in London place him;
As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the King of England's stay at home;
The emperor's coming in behalf of France,
To order peace between them; and omit
All the occurrences, whatever chanced,
Till Harry's back-return again to France:
There must we bring him; and myself have play'd
The interim, by remembering you 't is past,
Then brook abridgement, and your eyes advance,
After your thoughts, straight back again to France.

| Exit |
Scene 1. France. The English camp

Enter Fluellen and Gower

Gow. Nay, that’s right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy’s day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, asse my friend, Captain Gower: the rascally, scauld, beggarly, lousy, pragging knave, Pistol, which you and yourself and all the world know to be no petter than a fellow, look you now, of no merits, he is come to me and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and bid me eat my leek: it was in a place where I could not breed no contention with him; but I will be so bold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistol

Gow. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu. ’Tis no matter for his swellings nor his turkey-cocks. God pless you, Aunchient Pistol! you scurvy, lousy knave, God pless you!

Pist. Ha! art thou bedlam? dost thou thirst, base Trojan,
To have me fold up Parca’s fatal web?
Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Flu. I peseech you heartily, scurvy, lousy knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek: because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections and your appetites and your digestions doo’s not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his goats.

Flu. There is one goat for you. [Strikes him.] Will you be so good, scauld knave, as eat it?
Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Flu. You say very true, scauld knave, when God's will is: I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your victuals: come, there is sauce for it. [Strikes him.] You called me yesterday mountain-squire; but 35 I will make you to-day a squire of low degree. I pray you, fall to: if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

\[\text{Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge}
\text{I eat and eat, I swear. — Act v. i. 46, 47.}\]

Gow. Enough, captain: you have astonished him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days. Bite, I pray you; it 40 is good for your green wound and your ploody coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly, and out of doubt and out of question too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge: I eat and eat, I swear

Flu. Eat, I pray you: will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.
Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see I eat.
Flu. Much good do you, scauld knave, heartily.
Nay, pray you, throw none away; the skin is good for your broken coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at 'em; that is all.
Pist. Good.
Flu. Ay, leeks is good: hold you, there is a groat to heal your pate.
Pist. Me a groat!
Flu. Yes, verily and in truth, you shall take it; or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.
Pist. I take thy groat in earnest of revenge.
Flu. If I owe anything, I will pay you in cudgels: you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God b' wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate.

[Exit 65]
Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition, begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise; and henceforth let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.

[Exit
Pist. Doth fortune play the huswife with me now?
News have I, that my Nell is dead i' the spital
Of malady of France;
And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.
Old I do wax; and from my weary limbs
Honour is cudgelled. Well, bawd I'll turn,
And something lean to cutpurse of quick hand.
To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:
And patches will I get unto these cudgell'd scars,
And swear I got them in the Gallia war's.  [Exit

SCENE 2.  France.  A royal palace

Enter, at one door, King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Gloucester, Warwick, Westmoreland, and other Lords; at another, the French King, Queen Isabel, the Princess Katharine, Alice and other Ladies, the Duke of Burgundy, and his train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met!
Unto our brother France, and to our sister,
Health and fair time of day; joy and good wishes
To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine;
And, as a branch and member of this royalty,
By whom this great assembly is contrived,
We do salute you, Duke of Burgundy;
And, princes French, and peers, health to you all!

Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your face,
Most worthy brother England; fairly met:
So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Isa. So happy be the issue, brother England,
Of this good day and of this gracious meeting,
As we are now glad to behold your eyes;
Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them
Against the French, that met them in their bent,
The fatal balls of murdering basilisks:
The venom of such looks, we fairly hope,
Have lost their quality, and that this day
Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love.

K. Hen. To cry amen to that, thus we appear.
Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you.

Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love,
Great Kings of France and England! That I have labour'd,
With all my wits, my pains and strong endeavours,
To bring your most imperial majesties
Unto this base and royal interview,
Your mightiness on both parts best can witness.
Since then my office hath so far prevail'd
That, face to face and royal eye to eye,
You have congreed, let it not disgrace me,
If I demand, before this royal view,
What rub or what impediment there is,
Why that the naked, poor and mangled Peace,
Dear nurse of arts, plenties and joyful births,
Should not in this best garden of the world,
Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage?
Alas, she hath from France too long been chased,
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in it own fertility.
Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
Unpruned dies; her hedges even-pleach'd,
Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair,
Put forth disorder'd twigs; her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock and rank fumitory
Doth root upon, while that the coulter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery;
The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip, burnet and green clover,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness and nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility.
And as our vineyards, fallows, meads and hedges,
Defective in their natures, grow to wildness,
Even so our houses and ourselves and children
Have lost, or do not learn for want of time,
The sciences that should become our country;
But grow like savages,—as soldiers will
That nothing do but meditate on blood,—
To swearing and stern looks, defused attire
And every thing that seems unnatural.
Which to reduce into our former favour
You are assembled: and my speech entreats
That I may know the let, why gentle Peace
Should not expel these inconveniences
And bless us with her former qualities.

K. Hen. If, Duke of Burgundy, you would the peace,
Whose want gives growth to the imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands;
Whose tenours and particular effects
You have enscheduled briefly in your hands.

Bur. The king hath heard them; to the which as yet
There is no answer made.

K. Hen. Well then the peace,
Which you before so urged, lies in his answer.

Fr. King. I have but with a cursorary eye
O'erglanced the articles: pleaseth your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To re-survey them, we will suddenly
Pass our accept and peremptory answer.

K. Hen. Brother, we shall. Go, uncle Exeter,
And brother Clarence, and you, brother Gloucester,
Warwick and Huntingdon, go with the king;
And take with you free power to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisdports best
Shall see advantageable for our dignity,
Anything in or out of our demands,
And we'll consign thereto. Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes, or stay here with us?

Q. Isa. Our gracious brother, I will go with them:
Haply a woman's voice may do some good,
When articles too nicely urged be stood on.

K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here with us:
She is our capital demand, comprised
Within the fore-rank of our articles.

Q. Isa. She hath good leave.

[Exeunt all except Henry, Katharine, and Alice

K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair,
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms
Such as will enter at a lady’s ear
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?

Kath. Your Majesty shall mock at me; I cannot speak your England.

K. Hen. O fair Katharine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonnez-moi, I cannot tell what is ‘like me’.

K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate, and you are like an angel.

Kath. Que dit-il? que je suis semblable à les anges?

Alice. Oui, vraiment, sauf votre grace, ainsi dit-il.

K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine; and I must not blush to affirm it.

Kath. O bon Dieu! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

K. Hen. What says she, fair one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Alice. Oui, dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits: dat is de princess.

K. Hen. The princess is the better Englishwoman. I’ faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding: I am glad thou canst speak no better English; for, if thou couldst, thou wouldst find me such a plain king that thou wouldst think I had sold my farm to buy my crown. I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say ‘I love you’: then if you urge me farther than to say ‘do you in faith?’ I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; 't faith, do: and so clap hands and a bargain: how say you, lady?

K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair,
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms
Such as will enter at a lady's ear
And plead his love-suit to her gentle heart?  [Act v. 2. 98-101.]

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, me understand well.

K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one, I have neither words nor measure, and for the... other, I have no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at leapfrog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife. Or if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like a butcher and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off. But, before God, Kate, I cannot look greenly nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use till urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of anything he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook. I speak to thee plain soldier: if thou canst love me for this, take me; if not, to say to thee that I shall die, is true; but for thy love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy; for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places: for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours, they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white; a curled pate will grow bald; a fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow: but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon; or rather the sun and not the moon; for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me; and take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king. And what sayest thou then to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible dat I sould love de enemy of France?
K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate; but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine: and, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French; which I am sure will hang upon my tongue like a newly married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. Je quand sur le possession de France, et quand vous avez le possession de moi,—let me see, what then? Saint Denis be my speed!—donc votre est France et vous êtes mienne. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom as to speak so much more French: I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf votre honneur, le François que vous parlez, il est meilleur que l'Anglois lequel je parle.

K. Hen. No, faith, is't not, Kate: but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly-falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English, canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know thou lovest me: and at night when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her dispraise those parts in me that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me mercifully; the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou beest mine, Kate, as I have a saying faith within me tells me thou shalt, I get thee with scambling. How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon très cher et devin déesse?
Kath. Your majestee ave fausse French enough to deceive de most sage demoiselle dat is en France.

K. Ken. Now, fie upon my false French! By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate: by which honour I dare not swear thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untampering effect of my visage. Now, beshrew my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me: therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when I come to woo ladies, I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appear: my comfort is, that old age, that ill layer up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face: thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better: and therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, wilt thou have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say 'Harry of England, I am thine': which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will tell thee aloud 'England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine'; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music and thy English broken; therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English; wilt thou have me?

Kath. Dat is as it sall please de roi mon père.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it sall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I kiss your hand, and I call you my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez: ma foi, je ne veux point que vous abaissez votre grandeur en baisant la main d’une de votre seigneurie indigne serviteur; excusez-moi, je vous supplie, mon très-puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames et demoiselles pour être bâisées devant leur noces, il n’est pas la coutume de France.

K. Hen. Madam my interpreter, what says she?

Alice. Dat it is not be de fashion pour les ladies of France,—I cannot tell vat is baiser en Anglish.

K. Hen. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entendre bettre que moi.

K. Hen. It is not a fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say?

Alice. Oui, vraiment.

K. Hen. O Kate, nice customs curtsy to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country’s fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places stops the mouth of all find-faults; as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently and yielding. [Kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate: there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your father.

Re-enter the French King and his Queen, Burgundy, and other Lords

Bur. God save your majesty! my royal cousin, teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bur. Is she not apt?
K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you must make a circle.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink and yield, as love is blind and enforces.

Bur. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. That is so: and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness, who cannot see many a fair French city for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid; for they are all girdled with maiden walls that war hath never entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of may wait on her: so the maid that stood in the way for my wish shall show me the way to my will.

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Is't so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article: His daughter first, and then in sequel all, According to their firm proposed natures.

Exe. Only he hath not yet subscribed this: Where your majesty demands, that the King of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form and with this addition, in French, Notre très-cher fils Henri, Roi d'Angleterre, Héritier de France; and thus in Latin, Praeclarissimus filius noster Henricus, Rex Angliae, et Hæres Franciæ.
Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied, But your request shall make me let it pass.

K. Hen. I pray you then, in love and dear alliance, Let that one article rank with the rest; And thereupon give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son, and from her blood raise up Issue to me; that the contending kingdoms Of France and England, whose very shores look pale With envy of each other's happiness, May cease their hatred, and this dear conjunction Plant neighbourhood and Christian-like accord In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Now, welcome, Kate: and bear me witness all, That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

[Flourish]

Q. Isa. God, the best maker of all marriages, Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one! As man and wife, being two, are one in love, So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal, That never may ill office, or fell jealousy, Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage, Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms, To make divorce of their incorporate league; That English may as French, French Englishmen, Receive each other. God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage: on which day, My Lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath, And all the peers', for surety of our leagues. Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me; And may our oaths well kept and prosperous be!

[Senet. Exit]
EPILOGUE

Enter Chorus

Chor. Thus far, with rough and all-unable pen,
   Our bending author hath pursued the story,
In little room confining mighty men,
   Mangling by starts the full course of their glory.
Small time, but in that small most greatly lived
   This star of England: Fortune made his sword;
By which the world's best garden he achieved,
   And of it left his son imperial lord.
Henry the Sixth, in infant bands crown'd king
   Of France and England, did his king succeed;
Whose state so many had the managing,
   That they lost France and made his England bleed:
Which oft our stage hath shown; and, for their sake,
In your fair minds let this acceptance take.

[Exit]
NOTES

Act I

PROLOGUE.—To do justice to the great subject of the play, the chorus desires to have no less than a kingdom for a stage, princes as actors, "and monarchs to behold the swelling scene". It speaks in depreciating and apologetic terms of the poorness of the stage, the insignificance of the performers—"mere ciphers to the great accompt", and bids the spectators make up for these imperfections by letting their imagination have full play.

SCENE I.—The first scene opens with a conversation between the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Ely respecting a bill laid before Parliament in Henry IV's reign, and now again in Henry V's, which, if passed, would deprive the Church of half its possessions. To prevent this, Canterbury proposes to urge the king to a war with France, and to offer him an unusually large subsidy for that purpose from the Church. In discussing the likelihood of the king being favourably inclined to their side or not, he remarks upon the wonderful change his character has undergone since his accession to the throne, and is lavish in his praises of the ability and excellent qualities Henry now displays.

SCENE II.—Subsequently, in the presence-chamber, being solemnly adjured to give an unbiassed opinion regarding the justice of the king's claim to the throne of France, the archbishop proceeds to show that the Salic law was originally not devised for the realm of France, that several rulers of that country had claimed the throne in right of women, and that, therefore, there was no just bar to his claim. To further incite the king he recalls the great deeds of his ancestor, Edward III, in France, and in this endeavour is backed up by Ely, Exeter, and Westmoreland.

The wisdom of guarding against a probable inroad of the Scots is then pointed out, and Canterbury having made his famous comparison between a well-ordered government and a commonwealth of bees, the French ambassador is called in, who delivers a taunting message from the Dauphin, accompanied by an equally insulting gift of a tun of tennis-balls. This piece of mockery the king wittily turns to account against the Dauphin; he bids the ambassador announce that "he is coming on in a well-hallowed cause", and observes that his master's "jest will savour but of shallow wit, when thousands weep more than did laugh at it".
Prologue

Chorus.—[The aim of the chorus is to give the audience such information respecting events occurring in the interval between the acts as would enable them to intelligently follow the play. Read what the chorus says at the commencement of each act. Notice how fine the lines are, and how constantly the spectators are reminded that the grandeur of the actions set forth cannot be adequately represented on a poor and narrow stage, and are therefore desired to draw freely on their own imagination to make up for the defects and shortcomings of the performance.

Other plays of Shakespeare that have a chorus are Romeo and Juliet, Winter’s Tale, and Pericles, but it is only in Henry V that Chorus speaks a Prologue before each act.]

1. Muse. The Muses were goddesses who presided over poetry and other arts: a Muse of fire is an aspiring, inspiriting Muse.

2. that would ascend the brightest heaven of invention, that would raise her imagination to the loftiest heights, and put forth the highest powers of invention.

3. swelling; increasing in grandeur and pomp.

4. port, carriage, bearing, demeanour.

5. leash’d. A leash is a lash or line by which a hound is held.

famine, sword, and fire. These three attendants of war are commonly spoken of as ‘the dogs of war’.

6. gentles; a term of courtesy used in addressing an audience.

7. unraised spirits, spirits that cannot rise, like the “Muse of fire” (l. 1).

8. cockpit. Also used in contempt. The old theatre in Drury Lane was formerly a cockpit.

9. vastly, vast.

may, can.

10. this wooden O refers to the Globe Theatres, which were built of wood, and were circular within. Shakespeare elsewhere speaks of the earth as “this little O”, and of the stars as “you fiery O’s”.

the very casques, the actual helmets. Henry V’s helmet is over his tomb in Westminster Abbey.

11. The powers of imagination of the audience are to be the “crooked figure”: the actors’ efforts will supply the ciphers.

12. since a crooked figure may attest in little place a million, e.g. the crooked figure 1 followed by six noughts represents in a little space a million.

13. accomplt, account, whole.

14. imaginary forces, powers of imagination. Compare the use ‘imaginary’” in l. 25. Which is the passive, which the active use?

15. piece out our imperfections with your thoughts, make good our shortcomings by drawing on your imagination.

16. make imaginary puissance, imagine a large force.
28. deck our kings, clothe the actors with royal apparel. (Deck has no connection with decorate.)

30, 31. turning the accomplishment of many years into an hourglass, crowding the incidents of many years into the space of an hour.

31. for the which supply, i.e. for the supply of the information concerning the events that transpire in the intervals between the acts.

Act I—Scene 1

1. that self bill. In him-self and similar pronouns self was originally an independent word in apposition with the personal pronoun, and used to emphasize it.

3. was like = was likely to have passed.

4. scrambling, contentious, scrambling.

5. question, discussion.

15. lazars, poor leprous people. The word is derived from Lazarus, the name of the beggar in the parable.

21. but what prevention (is there)?

22. fair regard, just consideration.

26. mortified, killed, extinguished.

20. offending Adam, evil, vicious disposition. The old Adam is a phrase often used for a man's worldly nature, and his proneness to fall into sin.

34. a heady currance, an impetuous current, sweeping before it all the faults of the prince.

35. nor never. This double negative is of frequent occurrence in early writers. There are very many instances in this play.

Hydra-headed. A hydra was a fabulous water-snake with many heads, which, when cut off, were succeeded by others. Hence hydra-headed means constantly recurring.

43. list, listen to.

44. in music, in smooth, flowing language.

45. any cause of policy, any political question.

46. the Gordian knot. Gordius, a king of Phrygia, fastened a knot so intricate that no one could untie it. An oracle declared that whoever loosed the knot should reign over all Asia. Alexander the Great cut the knot with his sword.

47. familiar as his garter, as easily as his garter.

48. a charter'd libertine. Libertine, one who is free; chartered, possessing a charter of privileges. The phrase, therefore, means one who is privileged to be free, a phrase eminently applicable to the air which "bloweth where it listeth".

49. the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears, i.e. men stand mute and expectant ("to steal", l. 50) in wonder on hearing his eloquent words.
practic, theoretic—are old terms for practical and theoretical, as well as for practice and theory.

this theoretic. Henry's great theoretical knowledge must spring, the Archbishop thinks, from practical experience of life; yet how can this be so in the case of one who was addicted to courses vain? The Bishop of Ely suggests that under the veil of a wild life the prince "obscured his contemplation"; concealed the fact that he was really marking the characters and manners of men.

addiction, inclination.

and never noted, and never (was there) noted.

sequestration, seclusion.

popularity, association with the common people. (Lat. popularis, pertaining to the people.)

obscured his contemplation, kept in the background his serious observation of men and things.

which; referring to contemplation.

crescive in his faculty, increasing by its very nature. In old English his was both masculine and neuter, being the genitive of 'he' and 'it', and is used nearly always by Shakespeare where we should use 'its'. But see act v. 2. 40.

exhibitors. Those who introduced a bill into Parliament. Holinshed says the bill was "exhibited in the Parliament".

upon our spiritual convocation, as the result of our ecclesiastical meeting.

in regard of causes, in regard to matters.

open'd at large, set forth fully.

several, details.

unhidden passages, clear lines of succession. Passages here means 'the passing from one person to another', hence 'a line of succession'.

some certain dukedoms, some particular dukedoms.

upon, at.

go we; imperative, 1st plural.

embassy, errand.

Act I—Scene 2

cousin. He was a relation of the king by marriage.

resolved, receive explanation.

the law Salique, which excluded females from the throne, was not in operation in France till the fourteenth century, on the death of Louis X.

or . . . or, either . . . or (compare the Lat. aut . . . aut).

wrest, or bow your reading, twist or distort your interpretation.
15-17. The paraphrase will be something like this: Do not burden your conscience, which knows the right, with the sin of subtly developing titles which, looked at impartially, are seen to be false.

19, 20. in approbation of, in making good; in vindicating.

21. impawn, involve.

28. brief mortality, human life.

29. conjuration, solemn appeal.

40. gloss, interpret, with the idea of unfairness; misconstrue. The corresponding noun 'gloss' conveys no notion of unfairness.

45. Saale; river Saale, a tributary of the Elbe, in Saxony.

49. dishonest, dishonourable; unchaste.

51. inheritrix, i.e. of any property.

58. defunction, death. Compare our word 'defunct', meaning 'dead'. (Lat. defungor, defunctus, to finish.) This classical term suits the formal style in which the Archbishop is speaking.

56-64. The French, we are told, possessed the Salique land 421 years after the death of King Pharamond, who died in the year 426. This, therefore, brings us up to 847 as the date of the French possession. Yet in almost the very next line we are told that Charles the Great 'seated' the French there in 895. There certainly seems some carelessness in the matter of these figures, which are those of the historian Holinshed, whom Shakespeare mostly follows.

66. heir general, general heir; or heir to several.

72. find, provide.

73. naught, of no value.

74. convey'd himself, passed himself off.

75. Charlemain, known in history as Charles the Bald.

77. Lewis the Tenth should be 'the Ninth'. The mistake occurs in Holinshed. Lewis here and elsewhere a monosyllable.

82. lineal of, lineally descended from. See note to 1. 56-64.

88. King Lewis his satisfaction. It was at one time erroneously supposed that 's, the sign of the possessive case, was a contraction of 'his', and so after a proper name ending in 's the 'his' was written in full.

93. to hide them in a net, i.e. to screen themselves behind a network of false argument.

94. amply, fully.

imbar, 'to bar in; secure; and so to maintain and defend their titles by contending that, though derived from the female, their claim was a stronger one than Henry's'. In the place of imbar the reading imbure is sometimes substituted, meaning to lay bare; disclose.

98. in the book of Numbers, viz., chap. xxvii. ver. 8.

99. When the man dies (having no son).

Summary of the Archbishop's arguments: (1) That the Salic law only applied to the Salic land, situated between the rivers Sada and Elbe, and that it was not devised for the realm of France at all. (2) That several French monarchs, like Pepin, Hugh Capet, and Lewis IX, had claimed the throne in right of women. (3) That there was Scriptural warrant for a man claiming an inheritance through the female.

102. into, unto.
103. great-grandsire, Edward III.
107. making defeat, inflicting defeat.
108. whiles. The old genitive of the noun 'while', time, meaning of or during the time; used adverbially.
110. forage, make havoc.
111. entertain, keep engaged.
112. the full pride, the flower of their strength.
114. cold for action, cold for want of action. At the battle of Crecy the English army was arranged in three divisions, of which only two were engaged, the reserve taking no part in the action.
118. renowned them, made them renowned. We have here a noun used as a verb. Such points will not henceforward be mentioned in the notes: the pupil should make lists of them.
119. runs. The verb is singular notwithstanding the plural subject, because "blood and courage" represents but one idea.
120. May-morn of his youth. The king was now in his twenty-seventh year.
126. so hath your highness = as indeed you have. These words are either said by way of emphasis, or else the previous line should be added to Exeter's speech.
128. whose hearts have left their bodies, &c., i.e. already, in imagination, they were encamped in the fields of France.
137. lay down our proportions, settle the numbers necessary; make preparations proportionate to the danger.
138. road, inroad.
140. marches, borders. (A.S. meare, a mark, bound, border.)
143. coursing snatchers, roving freebooters.
144. main intendment, an assault by the whole force of Scotland.
145. still, always.
152. girding, investing.
154. shook, more common than shaken in Shakespeare.
the ill neighbourhood, i.e. the unneighbourliness of the invaders.
155. fear'd, frightened.
156. for hear her but exampled by herself, hear an example from her past history.
158. a mourning widow of her nobles. A reference either to the loss at Crecy, or to the absence of her nobles.
160. impounded, to put in a pound, i.e. an enclosure in which strayed animals are confined.
stray, a strayed animal.
161. King of Scots. David Bruce, taken prisoner at the battle of Neville's Cross, Oct. 17th, 1346, while Edward was away in France. The battle of Crecy was fought on Aug. 26th, 1346.

169. being in prey, being in quest of prey.

175. a crush'd necessity, a necessity that is crushed, overcome (by the reasons given in the next two lines). Instead of crush'd some editions have 'curst'. Several other changes have been proposed, such as 'crude', 'crazed'.

180. government, though high and low and lower; a reference to the three estates of the realm—king, lords, and commons. The orderly working of such a government is compared to the harmonious blending of different parts in music.

181. consent, accord; harmony. See also line 206.

182. congreeing, agreeing.

183. in divers functions, into various duties and occupations.

185. setting endeavour in continual motion, &c., arousing (in him) unceasing endeavour, subject, however, always to obedience of the law as his aim or mark.

187. busied in his majesty, busy in his kingly duties.

202. sad-eyed, grave-looking.

203. executors, executioners; those who carry out the sentence of the judge. Note the accents are upon the first and third syllables.

212. borne, carried out.

220. the name of, the reputation for.

225. or. Cf. l. 12.

226. empery, sovereignty.

227. her almost kingly dukedoms, as Normandy, Burgundy, Aquitaine, Brittany.

232. Turkish mute. An allusion to the deaf and dumb attendants in the Turkish court, who were so chosen that they could hear and reveal nothing.

233. not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph, not honoured even with the most transitory inscription. A waxen epitaph is an epitaph written on wax, and hence very perishable. There may be here a reference to the custom, once common upon the death of an eminent person, for his friends to compose short poems or epitaphs in his praise and affix them to the hearse or grave by pins, paste, or wax; but the expression is rather to be taken figuratively.

239, 240. shall we sparingly show you far off the Dauphin's meaning? shall we vaguely hint to you the Dauphin's meaning?
242. My passion is as much under the control of my will and pleasure.
245. in few, in few words; in brief.
250. you savour too much of your youth, your claim is too much like your youthful follies. See l. 295.
252. galliard, a lively dance. (Fr. gaillard, merry, jovial.)
253. you cannot revel into dukedoms there; alluding to the wild and riotous life the prince had previously led. Accordingly the Dauphin mockingly tells him that his dancing feats will not gain him anything in France, nor his revels dukedoms. Qualities more manly would be required for such a task.
254. meeter for, (as) more suited to.
255. in lieu of, in return for. This is the usual meaning of this phrase in Shakespeare.
262. set, a technical term in tennis. The game was played in a large oblong court, divided into two parts, one the service side from which the ball was served, the other the defensive or hazard side. The floor in each division had painted lines across it called chaces. A game of tennis was called a set, and to win a set was to win the best of eleven games.
263. hazard. The pun upon the word is obvious.
264. wrangler, an opponent.
266. chaces; used also figuratively for contests.
267. comes o'er us, twits; taunts us.
268. This illustrates act i, scene 1, 63.
269. seat, throne.
270. hence, away from court.
274. show my sail of greatness, display my full power.
282. gun-stones; when cannon were first used the balls were made of stone.
283. wasteful, destructive.
292. to venge me, to avenge myself.
303. save those (thoughts) to God.
304. proportions, numbers proportionate to the needs of the enterprise.
307. God before probably means God going before, i.e. with God's help; or perhaps = before God, i.e. I swear by God. Shakespeare represents Henry as a man of deep religious feeling. See iii. 6. 156, and many other passages, and carefully note them.

Act II

PROLOGUE.—The chorus speaks of the enthusiastic preparations for the war that are everywhere being made throughout England. The French in their alarm have bribed three noblemen to assassinate the king before he embarked for France. The spectators are then asked to transport themselves in imagination to Southampton, where the events connected with the disclosure of the conspiracy took place.
Scene I.—Bardolph, accosting Corporal Nym, enquires if he is yet on friendly terms with Pistol, who has recently married Nell Quickly, a former sweetheart of Nym's. The latter answers in a vague and disjointed fashion, and darkly hints that he will take revenge "when time shall serve". Pistol entering on the scene a quarrel ensues, marked by much braggadocio on both sides, Pistol's bombastic rant being of the very first quality. The disputants are at length quieted by the efforts of Bardolph, who is anxious for them to be at peace, that they may proceed to the war in company, and as "sworn brothers". In the meantime the boy coming in reports that Sir John Falstaff (their patron and friend) is very ill, and begs them to come and attend him. In Scene 3 these worthies are depicted in doleful mood over the death of Falstaff, and the hostess gives some affecting particulars of his last hours. They then take their leave of Mistress Quickly and prepare to join the forces bound for France, Pistol having given his wife some advice as to the conduct of the business (at Eastcheap tavern) during his absence.

Scene II.—A council is held at Southampton, at which the king, his chief nobles, and likewise the conspirators, are present. The latter are unanimous in their acknowledgment of the excellence of the king's government, and of the devoted loyalty of all his subjects. When the king proposes to set at liberty a man who was arrested the previous day for railing against his person, the conspirators strongly recommend him to show no such leniency. At this point, with dramatic effect, a paper is placed in their hands, charging them with treason. Taken aback, their very faces convict them, and they at once confess their guilt, and appeal for that mercy which they had just denied to a prisoner of much meaner account. In a powerful and impressive speech the king points out the horror of the detestable crime they contemplated, and particularly reproaches Lord Scroop with ingratitude and falseness, showing how utterly he had been deceived in him. Touching himself, the king observed, he sought no revenge, but for the safety of the kingdom at large it was necessary to deliver them up to the law.

Scene IV.—The concluding scene of this act is laid in France. The French king and his counsellors fully realize the necessity of making fitting preparations to meet the on-coming of the English. The Dauphin also admits the advisability of this, yet affects to despise the foe, and speaks in a most slighting and contemptuous manner of Henry. The Constable assures him he is altogether mistaken in the character of the English king. An embassy from England is now introduced, at the head of which is Exeter, who, on behalf of Henry, makes a formal demand of the French crown, and threatens, in the event of refusal, the direst horrors of war.

Prologue

2. silken dalliance, silken garments and the dalliance or easy life associated with them are laid aside.

6. the mirror of all Christian kings. Henry is so called as reflecting in his person all the virtuous qualities of Christian kings.
7. Mercuries; Mercury was the attendant and messenger of the gods.

8. Expectation is here personified, and sees in anticipation the acquisition of crowns and coronets by the sword.

9. hilts; formerly the only protection for the hands was the cross-bar just below the handle. This forming, as it were, two projections on either side, probably accounts for the plural 'hilts' which is oftener used in Shakespeare than the singular 'hilt'.

10. crowns imperial, crowns and coronets, i.e. crowns worn by emperors, kings, and peers.

14. pale policy. It is easy to see how pale is here used to mean cowardly.

16. model to thy inward greatness, small in size as compared with thy real greatness. A 'model' is properly a copy on a small scale, a miniature.

18. that honour would (have) thee do.

19. kind and natural have almost the same meaning. "Creeping things after their kind."

20. France, i.e. the King of France.

22. treacherous crowns, crown pieces to bribe them.

20-30. The following table of descent will help to make clear the lineage of the Earl of Cambridge, and also his motive for entering into a conspiracy against Henry's life:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>EDWARD III.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Richard II. (deposed 1399).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philippa, married Mortimer, Earl of March.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roger Mortimer, Earl of March.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Holinshed says: "Divers write that Richard Earl of Cambridge did not conspire with Lord Scroop and Sir Thomas Gray for the murdering of King Henry to please the French king withal, but only to the intent to exalt to the crown his brother-in-law, the Earl of March, as heir to Lionel Duke of Clarence."

24. Lord Scroop of Masham. This nobleman doubtlessly cherished, in secret, bitter feelings against the House of Lancaster, for both his father and his uncle, Archbishop Scrope, had been put to death by Henry IV. His wife, moreover, was a relation of the Earl of Cambridge.
25. Sir Thomas Grey of Northumberland 'was probably a partisan of the Percies, who were defeated by Henry IV'.

26. gilt . . . guilt. This particular play on words Shakespeare uses more than once. Such puns were probably much to the taste of the audience in Shakespeare’s day.

28. this grace of Lings, one ‘who does the greatest honour to the royal title’.

31. linger . . . on, prolong. The verb is here used transitively.

31, 32. we’ll digest the abuse of distance. Usually explained as, ‘We’ll manage the deception as to distance’, viz. in transferring the scene from one place to another.

32. force a play. It seems impossible to get a sensible meaning out of these words. The line is faulty in metre, and doubtlessly corrupt, and probably the latter half of the preceding line as well.

34. is set, has set out.

39. pass, passage.

40. one stomach, ‘the taste of a single person’. There is also a punning allusion to sea-sickness.

41. Probably in this line and the next we have an instance of a numerous class of difficulties in Shakespeare’s language. He starts line 41 intending to say “But till the king come forth we do not shift our scene”, changing the form of expression afterwards into “Not till the king come forth do we shift our scene”.

Act II—Scene 1

1. Nym. This word is derived from the A.S. nimnan, to take, to steal, and is an appropriate name for the corporal.

3. Ancient (also written Auncient in act iii), an ensign, standard-bearer. Probably a corruption of Fr. enseigne.

6. wink, to half-close the eyes.

7, 8. what though? What then?

9. there’s an end, there’s an end of it, that’s enough.

11. sworn brothers to France, i.e. bound by oath to be faithful to one another in the French campaign. The expression is derived from the phrase ‘fratres jurati’, used of those who, in the days of adventure, pledged themselves to share each other’s fortunes.

15. that is my rest, ‘that is my resolve’, that is what I take my stand on. ‘Rest’ was a term in card-playing, and denoted the highest stake to which a person would go.

rendezvous. Nym’s use of words should be noticed; sometimes, as here, he uses a word which sounds finely, but whose meaning he does not understand, and which is quite unsuitable; often he speaks in a jerky, mysterious way, copiously quoting proverbial sayings, see II. 20-25.

18. Nell Quickly. See list of ‘Dramatis Personae’.

19. troth-plight, betrothed. To plight one’s troth is to pledge one’s good faith.
31. Lady (the Virgin Mary). Here a mere ejaculation.
33. Good lieutenant! This is probably a slip of the poet's, as Pistol's proper title is 'Ancient'. So in iii. 2 Nym calls Bardolph 'corporal'.
33. 34. offer nothing here, 'attempt no violence here'.
36. Iceland dog! Iceland dogs were noted for their long shaggy hair and outlandish appearance. They were very quarrelsome, and had pointed ears. Hence the term 'prick-ear'd'.
38, 39. thy valour ... your sword. The use of the plural pronoun instead of the singular was becoming common in Shakespeare's time: often an appropriateness can be noticed in the choice.
40. shog, jog.
solus. Nym's vocabulary is quite too much for Pistol, who is sure that 'solus' is a most offensive term. Pistol, however, has some good words: 'egregious', which he uses here and in iv. 4. 11, and 'mervailous'. Notice Pistol's fondness for alliteration and for rather old-fashioned words, such as mickle and wight.
41. egregious, unmitigated.
42. mervailous, marvellous (Fr. merveilleux).
44. maw, stomach.
perdy, a corruption of the Fr. par Dieu, by God.
47. I can take, I can take fire.
Pistol's cock is up. Flint pistols were in use at this time.
49. Barbason, the name of a fiend. Nym says that Pistol's ranting string of words cannot 'conjure' him into quietness as if he were an evil spirit.
51. foul ... scour, a foul pistol was cleaned (scoured) with a scouring-stick.
57. exhale, i.e. ex-haul, draw out (Abbott).
62. fore-foot, hand.
63. tall, brave.
66. couple a gorge! Pistol's French for 'coupez la gorge'.
68. hound of Crete. Perhaps a species of blood-hound, or the phrase may be meaningless: something Pistol has picked up at the theatre. See l. 78.
69. quondam. Latin for once, formerly. I will hold the quondam Quickly, I will keep her that was formerly Mistress Quickly.
70. pausta, briefly (Latin for 'few words').
71. go to. An expression of impatience, common in Shakespeare.
73, 74. would (go) to bed. The verb 'go' is frequently understood. So a few lines below "We must (go) to France together".
75. do the office of a warming-pan. In act iii, scene 2, the boy says, "For Bardolph, he is white-livered and red-faced"; and in scene 6 Fluellen says, "his face is all bubukles, and whelks, and flames o' fire".
78, 79. he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days, i.e. he'll one day come to the gallows. Said of the boy.
79. the king has killed his heart. Said of Falstaff, who had formerly been the prince's boon companion, "the tutor and the feeder of his riots", but whom Henry, on coming to the throne, sternly cast off.

84. let floods o'er-swell, &c. Doubtless another playhouse scrap.
Notice that Pistol speaks in verse throughout: it suits his bombast.

90. compound, settle.

93. sword is an oath, since swearing by it was swearing by a cross, the hilt forming a cross at the top.

99. a noble, an old coin worth 6s. 8d.

111. a quotidian tertian. These words are absurdly coupled together, since 'quotidian' means a fever that recurs every day, and
'tertian' every third day.

114. the even of it, the truth of it.

116. fracted, broken (Latin frango, fractum).

corroborate. Another word to be added to the collection of Pistol's high-sounding misused vocabulary.

118. he passes some humours and careers, he indulges in some caprice and fitful turns. 'To pass career' was a term used in horsemanship, meaning 'to run a certain course'.

Act II—Scene 2

2. by and by, soon.

8. his bedfellow. Holinshed writes: "The said Lord Scroop was in such favour with the king that he admitted him sometime to be his bedfellow".

14. Masham . . . knight. See lines 67 and 68.

18. in head, in force.

22. that grows not in a fair consent, 'that does not beat in harmony'.

23. nor leave not. Henry had made up his mind that he would neither take the traitors with him nor leave them behind. Note the double negative.

30. have steep'd their galls in honey, i.e. have allowed friendly feelings to take the place of hatred and bitterness.

31. create, created.

33. forget the office of our hand, forget how to use our hand.

34. quittance, requital, recompense.

40. enlarge, set free.

43. on his more advice, on his now being better advised; or perhaps it may mean—on further consideration of his case, 'his' being objective.
44. security. Used literally in the sense of heedlessness, want of care. (Lat. se for sine, without, cura, care.)

46. by his sufferance, by the enduring of him, i.e. by letting him go unpunished.

51. after the taste of = after undergoing.

54. proceeding on, resulting from.

55. how shall we, how wide we shall have to open our eyes.

61. the late commissioners, the recently appointed commissioners.

63. it, the commission, the document authorizing them to do certain business. What the business was does not appear.

74. are paper, i.e. white as paper.

76. out of appearance, out of sight.

79. quick, alive.

86. apt, ready.

to accord, to assent.

87, 88. all appertaining belonging to his honour = everything pertaining to his honour. The word ‘belonging’ is unnecessary.

90. and sworn unto the practices of France, and pledged himself to (support) the designs of France.

95. ingrateful. We say ‘ungrateful’, but ‘ ingratitude’. ‘Ungrateful’ is also found in Shakespeare.

98. coin’d me into gold; i.e. Scroop might have obtained almost any sum from the king if he had worked upon him for his own benefit. The words ‘thy’ and ‘foreign’ are emphatic.

100. may, can.

102. annoy, hurt.

103, 104. stands off as gross as black and white, stands out as conspicuously as black does from white.

107, 108. The force of the ‘so’ seems to be carried on from ‘grossly’ to ‘natural’. Treason and murder work so wickedly and yet so naturally together, that wonder forgot to ‘whoop’ at them.

109. When Scroop plotted treason and murder it was so outrageous that wonder was excited.

proportion, reason and fitness.

113. the voice, the vote as being ‘excellent’ in hell.

114. suggest, tempt, seduce.

116. colours, plausible pretexts.

118. The evil spirit that worked on Scroop did not trouble to suggest motives (instances), e.g. to persuade him he was doing a good thing for the nation, but merely bade him stand up and do his bidding.

123. Tartar, Tartarus, hell.

126. jealousy, suspicion.

127. affiance, confidence, trust. Henceforth the king’s trust in others would be marred by suspicion.

show, seem.
133. not swerving with the blood, not swerving through mere impulse.

134. deck'd in modest complement, decked with a modest demeanour that completed, as it were, the qualities within.

136. Trusting neither eye nor ear except after judgment freed (purged) from hate and prejudice.

137. bolted, sifted, freed from any impure admixture.

145. of, on the charge of.

152. which; referring to 'fault'.

155. for me, as for me, as regards myself.

157. what I intended, viz. to raise to the throne his brother-in-law, the Earl of March.

159. in sufferance, in suffering (the penalty).

rejoice (at).

166. quit, acquit, pardon.

175. tender, look after, regard.

181. dear, grievous.

183. like, alike, equally.

188. rub, obstacle. In the game of bowls anything which turns the bowl from its course is called a rub.

191. putting it straight in expedition, putting it at once in motion.

192. signs of war, ensigns, standards.

Act II Scene 3

1. bring thee, accompany thee.

2. Staines "was the first stage on the road from London to Southampton".

3. yearn, grieve.

7. wheresome'er, wheresoever.

9. Arthur's bosom. The hostess doubtless means Abraham's bosom, but as one commentator remarks, "The name of the famous knight of the Round Table is more familiar to her than that of Abraham".

10. 'a; a contraction of 'ha', which was also used for 'he' in middle English.

11. an it had been, as if it had been.

11, 12. christom child, for chrisom child, a child that died under a month old. The chrisom was a white cloth placed on the head of a child after being anointed with chrism at baptism, and used for its shroud if it died within a month of birth. ('Chrisom', consecrated oil, formerly used in baptism. The word is the same in origin as Christ, which means the Anointed One.)

12. parted, departed.

13. at the turning o' the tide. The superstitious belief that dying people are more likely to pass away at the ebb of the tide is not altogether extinct at sea-side places.

An old book on "Notable Things" says: "If the forehead of the sicke wane redde—and his nose waxe sharpe—if he pull strawes, or the clothes of the bedde—these are most certain tokens of death".

15. there was but one way—that it was all over with him.

16. 'a babbled of green fields. The original text had, "a Table of greene fields". Theobald, one of Shakespeare’s best commentators, suggested 'a babbled' for 'a table', and this is regarded as one of the most brilliant emendations ever made.

27. of sack, against sack. Sack, the name of a kind of dry sherry. The word probably comes from Fr. sec, dry.

32. well, the fuel is gone, &c. Falstaff would no longer supply Bardolph with the sack which had made his nose so red.

37. chattels, goods.

38. let senses rule, be guided by prudence.

Pitch and Pay, an old proverbial saying equivalent to ‘down with your money’, ‘pay up’. The probable origin of the expression is thus given: "One of the laws of Blackwellhall, the old cloth-hall of London, was 'that a penny should be paid by the owner of every bale of cloth for pitching' and storing the same. Hence the rule of the hall was pitch and pay'."

41. hold-fast is the only dog; a reference to the proverb, "Brag’s a good dog, but Holdfast’s a better".

42. Caveto. Latin for ‘take care’.

43. clear thy crystals, dry thine eyes.

51. housewifery, careful housekeeping.

keep close, close at home.

Act II—Scene 4

1. comes. There are two ways of explaining why this verb is written in the sing.: (i) that ‘English’ stands for ‘English king’; (2) that we have here another instance of a construction somewhat frequent in Shakespeare, viz. a sing. verb with a plural subject when the verb comes before the subject.

2. more than carefully, ‘with more than common care’.

3. to answer royally in our defences, to make on our part ample and fitting preparations.

7. to line, to fortify.

8. defendant, defensive.

13. the fatal English, &c., the English who, being underrated and despised, proved so fatal to us (at Crecy and elsewhere).

18, 19. Each of the three nouns in line 18 is the subject of one of the verbs in 19.

20. as, as if.

25. morris-dance; called also a Morisco, i.e. a Moorish dance. It was originally connected with May-day festivities, but was afterwards transferred to the celebration of Whitsuntide. The character of the accompanying music is the only thing that at all accounts for its particular name.

28. humorous, capricious, full of 'humours'.
29. fear attends her not, her movements cause no fear.
34. modest in exception, modest in raising objections.
36. vanities forespent, past follies.
37. Brutus. Lucius Brutus, whose brother had been killed by the tyrant Tarquin, feigned idiocy to escape his brother's fate. Subsequently he was instrumental in driving Tarquin out of Rome, and became first consul.

45. so the proportions of defence are fill'd = provided that the fullest measures of defence are taken.

46. of a weak and niggardly projection, being put forth or provided for in a weak and niggardly way.
47. The sense is quite clear. To plan defence on a mean scale is to act like a miser who spoils, &c.
48. think we, let us think.
50. flesh'd upon us, trained and fitted for war at our expense.
52. our familiar paths, the parts familiar to us, the parts where we live.
67. present, immediate.
69. turn head, turn at bay, face them.
70. spend their mouths, utter their cries. A phrase used by sportsmen.
80. 'long, belong.
83. the ordinance of times, what has been ordained or established by long usage.
85. no sinister nor no awkward claim, no perverse or patched-up claim. The Latin word sinister signifies, on the left hand, hence awkward, wrong, perverse.
86. pick'd from the worm-holes, &c., 'picked out from ancient and worm-eaten documents'.
88. line (of descent); i.e. a genealogical table. memorable here means calling to memory.
89. demonstrative, i.e. of his descent and claim.
90. willing you overlook, desiring you to look over.
91. evenly, directly, without a break in the line of descent.
94, 95. indirectly held, unrighteously withheld from the true claimant by birth.

102. in the bowels of the Lord = out of pure compassion. St. Paul (Philippians, i. 8), "I long after you all in the bowels of Christ".
102, 103. bids you . . . deliver up . . . and to take. We have here, as elsewhere in Shakespeare, the sign of the infinitive omitted before the first verb, and inserted before the second, which is farther away from the main verb.
105. and. The grammar would be clearer if this word were left out, as it leads one to expect that a finite verb will follow. In reading the line the accent must be placed strongly on 'your'.

124. womby vaultages, hollow vaults.
126. second accent, echo.

ordinance, i.e. ordnance, artillery.

132. Louvre, a building of immense size, and originally a royal palace, now used as a repository of paintings and works of art.

133. the mistress-court, the chief court; (and as referring to tennis) the best court.

137. masters, is master of.

145. small breath, short breathing-time.

Act III

PROLOGUE.—The chorus now bids the audience behold in imagination the embarkation of the king and his troops at Southampton; the majestic fleet, like a huge floating city, making its way to Harfleur, leaving England drained of its choicest manhood; the arrival at Harfleur of Exeter on his return from the French king, bringing back the offer of Katharine's hand and some petty dukedoms as a dowry—an offer that Henry rejects; and then, the opening of the siege.

SCENE I.—The first part of this act is taken up with a series of scenes before Harfleur, now in a state of siege. A breach has been made in the wall, and Henry, in a stirring and spirited address, animates his troops to renewed efforts, reminding them of the great deeds of their forefathers on French soil.

SCENE II.—Pistol and Nym find the fighting too hot, and not at all to their taste, and show a decided disposition to keep in the background. In this humour they are discovered by Fluellen, a Welsh officer, who, indignant at their cowardice, drives them forward to the breach. With their exit the boy is left alone, and falls into a soliloquy upon the character of the men he serves, whose distinctive features he hits off with great acuteness, and finally expresses his determination to quit their service out of sheer disgust at their villainy.

An amusing scene then follows from the meeting of four officers representing the different nationalities in Henry's army, Gower (English), Jamy (Scotch), Fluellen (Welsh), Macmorris (Irish). A quarrel between Fluellen and Macmorris on the disciplines of the wars is averted only by the town sounding a parley.

SCENE III.—Henry, addressing the governor and chief citizens, exhorts them to yield at once, lest, by their obstinacy, they should bring on themselves the savage excesses of a successful and enraged soldiery. The governor, disappointed in his expectation of help, consents to surrender. Henry gives the place in charge of Exeter, with an injunction to use mercy, and expresses his intention to retire to Calais with the rest of the troops, in consequence of the approach of winter and the increase of sickness in the army.
SCENE IV.—The scene is now transferred to the French king's palace at Rouen, where Katharine is taking a lesson in English from her maid, Alice.

SCENE V.—At the same place the king and his courtiers are assembled. The latter are impatient to get at the English, whom they speak of in the most disparaging terms. It is resolved to oppose the English without further delay, and intercept them on their march to Calais. Presumptuously confident of victory, the French king ventures to send forward Montjoy the herald to enquire of Henry what ransom he is prepared to give.

SCENE VI.—The scene then changes to the camp of the advanced guard of the English, who are making their way through Picardy towards Calais. During this journey Bardolph, for stealing "a pax", is condemned to be hanged. Pistol therefore comes to Fluellen, and in a style thoroughly Pistolian, desires him to use his influence to avert the fate that threatens his comrade. But Fluellen is a stickler for discipline, and declares he would not stir a step to save his brother in such a case. Pistol then departs, first giving vent to some insulting expressions, which Fluellen takes quietly, intending to bide his time.

The rear-guard having now come up, Fluellen reports to the king that the bridge, which the French had endeavoured to destroy, is preserved and the enemy repulsed; also that one Bardolph is to be executed for robbing a church—a disciplinary measure that the king approves of. At this point the arrival is announced of Montjoy, the French herald, who, in his master's name, bids Henry "consider of his ransom", and warns him of the certain doom of his followers. To this Henry replies that despite the weak and enfeebled condition of his army, he will not shrink from a battle if the French attempt to bar his way to Calais.

SCENE VII.—Both armies have in the meanwhile come within measurable distance of each other, and the French are encamped near Agincourt. The Dauphin and his brother officers are longing for morning to "be about the ears of the English". The prince is in a very bragging mood, and cannot say sufficient in praise of his horse. Upon his exit, the Constable, in an interchange of wit with Orleans, shows clearly that he does not hold a very high opinion of the Dauphin's valour. All agree, however, in running down the English, whose courage they assert is of a kind that springs from an inability to perceive danger. "Give them", says the Constable, "great meals of beef, and they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils."

Prologue

1. imagined wing, wings of imagination. See act i, prologue, l. 18.

6. the young Phœbus, the sun at early morn. The word Phœbus literally means bright, shining, and was used as an epithet of Apollo, the sun-god.

10. threaden sails, sails made of thread or fibre.

11. borne with, borne along by.
12. bottoms, hulks.
14. rivage, shore.
17. Harfleur, a place near the mouth of the Seine, on the north bank.
18. grapple your minds, &c. = mentally keep close behind this navy.
27. girded, surrounded.
30. to dowry, for a dowry.
32. likes not, pleases not. So iv. 1. 16, and iv. 3. 77.
33. linstock, a stick to which the match was fastened.
  chambers, small cannon. So named from the movable chamber at the breach into which the charge was put.
35. eke, lengthen out; hence, fill up, complete.

Act III—Scene 1

2. or close the wall up, &c.; i.e. either force your way through, or close the wall up with your dead bodies.
9. aspect. This word is always accented on the second syllable in Shakespeare.
10. portage. The sockets in which the eyes are set are compared to the port-holes (portage) of a ship, through which the brass cannon are seen.
11. o'erwhelm, overhang.
12. galled, fretted or worn away by the constant action of the waves.
13. jutty his confounded base, project beyond its troubled base.
14. swill'd, washed.
16, 17. bend up every spirit to his full height = strain every nerve to the utmost.
18. fet; an old form of fetched.
  fathers of war-proof, fathers who have proved their prowess and valour in war.
24. be copy, be a pattern.
27. the mettle of your pasture, the spirit of your bringing-up.
30. your. 'His' would be more grammatical.
31. slips, leashes for holding back a hound till let loose upon the game.
33. follow your spirit; follow with your body where your spirit already is. Compare act i. 2. 130.

Act III—Scene 2

4, 5. a case of lives, a set, a pair of lives.
5, 6. the very plain-song of it = the truth of it. The 'plain-song' was the simple air without variations.
7. humours do abound. He probably means, 'all sorts of freaks and accidents abound'.

20. Fluellen. The spelling represents approximately the Welsh pronunciation of Llewellyn.

    avaunt, begone.
    cullions, rascals, worthless fellows.

21. duke, commander (Lat. dux).

    men of mould, men of earth, poor mortal men.

24. bawcock, fine fellow. (Fr. beau coq.)

28. swashers, swash-bucklers, braggers, swaggerers.

29. would, should.

30. antics, buffoons.

31. white-livered, an epithet for a coward.

36. the best men, the bravest men.

41. purchase; properly what is obtained by effort (from Fr. pour-chasser, to seek after). Here, a mild term for plunder; what is stolen.

44. in Calais. A slip on the part of the poet, for the army was still some distance off this place.

46. would carry coals, do any dirty work, or degrading service;
    hence, submit to any indignity.

48. makes much against, goes much against.

50. pocketing up of wrongs. Notice the double sense in which these words are used.

54. presently, immediately.

59. disciplines, here and later = rules.

60. concavities, for excavation; depth.

70, 71. I will verify as much in his beard, I will prove it to his face.

77. expedition, for experience.

83. God-den, for good even, a salutation in use after mid-day.

93. a few disputations, a little discussion.

101. quit you, reply to your arguments.

112. mess, mass.

114. lig, lie.

115. pay't as valorously, &c., 'it' refers to 'service'. The expression therefore means, I'll perform this service as valiantly as I can.

116. breff, short.

117. question, discussion.

120, 121. ish a villain and . . . rascal; to finish the question supply 'to insult my nation?'

136. to be required, meaning, to be found.
Act III—Scene 3

2. parle, parley.
8. half-achieved, half-won.
11. flesh'd, made fierce by the sight or smell of blood. See note, act ii. 4. 50.
15. war is here personified.
17, 18. do . . . all fell feats enlink'd to, &c., do all sorts of savage deeds that go hand in hand with waste and desolation.
21. bootless, uselessly.
23. precepts, injunctions; orders.
29. heady, wild; mad-like.
37. Jewry, Judæa.
40. guilty in defence, i.e. guilty in obstinately and foolishly holding out.
42. of succours, about help.
47. defensible, capable of offering defence.
55. addrest, ready.

Act III—Scene 4

One commentator remarks that the chief objection to this scene is “that all the other French characters are allowed to speak in English, and therefore why not Katharine, especially since the scene adds neither force nor beauty to the play”. The scene would doubtless amuse the audience.

Act III—Scene 5

5. sprays, sprigs; offshoots.
6. scions; properly small branches or shoots that are grafted on to another tree. The word, therefore, practically means the same as ‘sprays’.
put in, grafted on to. The Dauphin is alluding to the Anglo-Norman origin of the English.
11. but here=if not, and depends on Mort de ma vie, “May I die if I do not sell my dukedom,” &c.
13. nook-shotten isle, ‘an island full of nooks and corners’, or, perhaps ‘an island thrust or shot into a corner’.
16. whom. The antecedent is contained in the preceding ‘their’, which=of them.
as in despite, as if with disfavour.
17. sodden water, water boiled (with barley-malt). ‘Sodden’ is the past participle of ‘seethe’, to boil.
18. drench, a draught.
sur-rein’d, over-ridden. Horses in this condition were given a mixture of hot water and ground malt or bran.
18. barley-broth. This term as well as the two preceding ones are no doubt sneeringly used of English beer.

19. decoct, warm, invigorate.

22. roping icicles, icicles that hang down like ropes.

24. sweat drops of gallant youth = act gallantly and vigorously.

25. poor, referring to 'fields'.

in their native lords, as regards their native lords (who are doing nothing to defend them).

28. bred out, weakened by the valour of our fathers being divided up amongst so many descendants.

30. lavoltas. The lavolta was a dance of Italian origin, consisting chiefly of high bounds, and whirls.

corantos, a quick, lively dance; a kind of gallop.

32. lofty. Satirically used with reference to the high bounds, and to the meaning 'noble, excellent'.

37. His name was D'Albret.

high constable, 'this nobleman had the official command of the French army'.

44. for your great seats, for the sake of your lofty positions.

51. a captive chariot, a chariot used for captives.

57. for achievement, either 'as the final act of his enterprise', or 'instead of achieving a victory'.

Act III—Scene 6

Picardy, one of the old provinces of France, of which Amiens was the most important town.

2. the bridge. Holinshed mentions that after Henry had crossed the Somme, he sent forward a portion of his forces to secure a certain bridge over the river Ternoise that lay in his way. On the arrival of this force at the bridge, they found the French endeavouring to destroy it. Whereupon they attacked and discomfited them, and so preserved the bridge till the king came, and passed over with his whole army.

5. Duke of Exeter. In scene 3 of this act, we read that Exeter was left in charge of Harfleur. Holinshed says that he left his lieutenant there and followed the king to Agincourt, but, as matter of fact, he was not present at the battle.

7. Agamemnon, commander-in-chief of the Greek forces before Troy.

12. Perhaps Fluellen is hazy as to Pistol's correct title; or, perhaps a man could be an ensign-lieutenant.

26. Fortune's furious fickle wheel. Pistol again indulges in alliteration, as in other instances that follow.

30. a pax. This ought to be written πx or πx, the word used both by Hall and Holinshed in recording this incident. The 'pax' was a box containing the consecrated bread used in the sacrament of the Lord's supper. It is related that a foolish soldier stole from a church a pix of copper gilt, which he happened to mistake for gold, that the culprit was led through the whole army, which halted for the purpose, and was then hanged on a tree close to the church which he had robbed.

A pax was a metal or wooden plate with the crucifix engraved on it, and during mass was carried round for communicants to give the kiss of peace.

47. and (with) vile reproach, i.e. and under circumstances of vile reproach.
56. figo (Spanish for 'fig'), an expression of contempt.
58. the fig of Spain. This expression has possibly reference to "the custom in Spain of giving poisoned figs to those who were objects of revenge". Pistol evidently uses it to emphasize his contempt.
60. counterfeit rascal, a rascally impostor.
71. sconce, a redoubt, earthwork.
75. new-tuned oaths. Oaths in foreign languages were brought home plentifully by the travelling Englishman.
76. a horrid suit of the camp, clothes bearing the marks of hard service in the field.
83. if I find a hole in his coat, if I note anything about him for which I can take him to task.
85. from the pridge, i.e. having come from the bridge, the whole phrase qualifying 'I'.
92. passages, occurrences.
101. bubukles, Fluellen's word for carbuncles; blotches.
102. whelks, pimples.
102, 103. his lips blows at his nose. Perhaps Fluellen means that his lips were protruding and turned upwards, forming as it were a pair of bellows for his nose, which was "like a coal of fire".

tucket, a trumpet flourish or signal (from Ital. toccata, a prelude or preliminary flourish).
113. habit, coat. The herald's coat was a tunic without sleeves and richly emblazoned.
120. advantage is a better soldier than rashness; i.e. to wait for an advantageous position is better generalship than to display rashness in attack.
123. upon our cue, in our turn. Cue (Fr. queue, a tail, end) is a stage phrase denoting the last words or tail-end of a speech, which gives the next player notice that it is his turn to come forward.
125. sufferance, patient endurance.
128. digested. We speak of 'swallowing an affront'.
142. impeachment, hindrance. (Fr. empêcher, to hinder.)
sooth, truth.
144. an enemy of ... vantage, an enemy that has an advantage either in condition or position.
148. who refers to ‘those few (people)’. The rule in modern English is to place the relative as near its antecedent as possible, for the sake of clearness. It will be noticed also that ‘who’ is followed by no verb to which it can be nominative.

156. God before. See note, act i. 2. 307.

158. there’s for thy labour. It was customary to reward the herald, whatever his message.

159. well advise himself, take good counsel with himself. The French verb of s’avisier.

Act III—Scene 7

3. an armour; here, as often in Shakespeare, a suit of armour.
9. of, with.
12. pasterns, the lowest part of a horse’s leg, between the fetlock and the hoof.
13. 14. as if his entrails were hairs; i.e. like tennis-balls, which were stuffed with hair.
14. Pegasus, a fabulous winged horse (see note on Perseus, 1. 21).
14, 15. chez les narines, &c. This curious French is usually corrected into qui a les narines.
18. Hermes, the Greek name for Mercury.
21. Perseus, a mythological hero, who killed Medusa, a human monster, from whose blood sprung the winged horse Pegasus.

he is pure air and fire. “Alluding to the ancient doctrine that men and animals were all made up of four elements—air, fire, earth, and water, and that those in whom air and fire predominated possessed a higher and finer nature.”

24. jades. The word ‘jade’ denotes a tired, worn-out horse.
26. absolute, perfect.
33. to the lodging of the lamb; i.e. to the lying down of the lamb.
36. argument, a subject.
47. a many. Compare ‘a few’. Some regard ‘many’ as a noun, meaning ‘number’.
55. 56. faced out of my way, opposed and turned out of my way; with a pun on ‘faces’.
58. go to hazard, make a wager. In line 60 it means encounter risk.
72. still, continually. The Constable admits that the Dauphin is active, always doing something; hinting that his actions are not creditable.
84. ‘tis a hooded valour, &c. An allusion to falcons, which are kept hooded or covered until let go, when they at first bate or flutter the wings. ‘Bate’ is also perhaps playfully used in the sense of abate, diminish.
95. ‘a fool’s bolt is soon shot’; i.e. a fool’s remarks are made quickly and without reflection. What Orleans says is, therefore, tantamount to, 'You are better at proverbs than I am by as much as a fool is readier and more heedless in uttering his thoughts than a wise man'.

97. overshot, put to the worse.
108. apprehension, intelligence; ability to perceive.
119. do sympathize with, are like.
120. robustious, fierce.
121. and then (if you) give.
124. shrewdly, badly.
126. stomachs, the appetite.

Act IV

Prologue.—The chorus presents a vivid picture of the camps on the eve of the battle. The darkness of the night, the flickering watch-fires, the sentinels at their posts, the neighing of the horses, and the sounds of the armourers at work are all detailed in a way that effectively kindles the imagination. The French merrily pass away the time in playing dice, and, overweeningly confident, set up as their stakes the prisoners they anticipate taking on the morrow. The English, worn out by sickness and privation, sit by their fires, and brood over the morning's danger, whilst their 'royal captain' goes through the camp from tent to tent, cheering their spirits, giving one and all a kindly greeting, and inspiring them with heart and courage for the approaching combat. Note another apology of the chorus for the poor and inadequate means at command to fitly represent the subject.

Scene I.—In the early dawn the king is talking to his brothers of the danger of their position.

After a touching little interview with Sir Thomas Erpingham, whose cloak he borrows for purpose of disguise, he is left alone by the nobles. Pistol enters and talks to the king as to one of his comrades. Then Fluellen and Gower come in and discourse on the wisdom of silence and sobriety in the camp.

The next to come his way are three soldiers, with whom he enters into conversation, still concealing his identity. Williams expresses the opinion that if the king's cause is not a just one he will have a heavy reckoning to make for all those that fall in the battle, and perish in the midst of their sins. This notion Henry combats at length, and Williams acknowledges that every man that dies ill is alone answerable for his misdeeds. The plain-spoken soldier, however, takes up a subsequent remark of the king's in somewhat too blunt a fashion, which causes Henry to observe that were the time convenient he should be angry with him. The soldier immediately suggests that the matter be made the occasion of a future quarrel between them, a proposition to which the king readily assents. They then exchange gloves as tokens by which they might know one another, each undertaking to wear the other's glove in his cap the day after the battle, and on beholding his own to challenge it.
Left alone, the king, in a fine soliloquy, dwells upon the uselessness of the ceremony which distinguishes kings from ordinary mortals. These reflections are followed by an appeal to God to steel his soldiers' hearts and sustain them in the unequal fight, and he further prays that his father's fault in usurping the throne be not remembered against him that day.

Scene II.—In the opposing camp the scene presented is of quite a different character. The Constable, Grandpré, and the Dauphin vie with one another in boastful talk as they prepare for battle.

Scene III.—The scene now returns to the English camp, where all is ready for battle. The "fearful odds" against them causes Westmoreland to exclaim—

"O that we now had here
But one ten thousand of those men in England
That do no work to-day!"

But this the king warmly deprecates, declaring that he does not wish a single man more to share with him the glory of that day. Rather would he give leave to any man to depart who shrinks from the fight, and reminding them it is St. Crispin's day, he sets forth in glowing words the honour that would cover the survivors of that day, the pride they would feel on each returning anniversary in showing their scars and recalling their feats.

The French Herald comes once more to ask if Henry will compound for his ransom, and receives from the king a spirited reply which rises from playful irony to real royal dignity. On the herald's departing, York comes to beg the honour of leading the van, which is granted him.

Scene IV.—The first scene on the field of battle shows to which side fortune leans, for the valiant Pistol puts to ransom a French soldier. A significant remark closes the scene: the camp is guarded by boys only.

Scene V.—In another part of the field the French officers are in a state of consternation and utter dismay at the confusion and repulse of their troops. They see nothing left them to save their honour but to die fighting.

Scene VI.—On the English side, Exeter brings word to the king that York and Suffolk have fallen. His description of the touching and pathetic manner of their death almost moves the king to tears; but this soft mood is immediately succeeded by one of great sternness, for, acting under the impression that the French were gathering together their scattered forces to renew the fight, he commanded that every man should kill his prisoners.

Scene VII.—Another explanation of this sanguinary order is supplied by Fluellen and Gower, and Fluellen proceeds to make his famous comparison between Henry and Alexander the Great. The honest Welshman then goes on to express admiration of the king, his countryman, whom he likens to Alexander the Great; and growing warm with his subject he makes some very amusing comparisons between Monmouth and Macedon.

The French herald again puts in an appearance, this time to beg permission to search out their nobles from among the slain, and to bury their dead. He admits that the day is Henry's.

The scene ends with a dialogue between Fluellen and the king, who gives Fluellen Williams's glove, pretending it is the Duke of Alençon's.

SCENE VIII.—Williams is returning with Gower to the king's tent when Fluellen meets them. The soldier, instantly recognizing the glove in the Welshman's cap, challenges it and strikes him. In the hubbub that follows, the king enters upon the scene and clears up the confusion, rewarding the soldier with a glove-full of crowns, and insisting on Fluellen being friends with him. The impetuous but good-natured Welshman, struck with the soldier's mettle, generously offers him twelve pence on his own account, which, however, Williams bluntly refuses.

An English herald then approaches, who hands the king a paper stating the number of prisoners of rank to be 1500, and the number slain on the enemy's side, 10,000; their own loss to be but 25, together with four gentlemen of rank. On thus learning the wonderful nature of the victory, Henry immediately issues orders that no boasting be heard, but that all praise be given to God; and that as soon as the dead were buried they should continue their march to Calais.

Prologue

1. entertain conjecture of, imagine.
2. creeping murmur, murmuring sounds creeping through the darkness from camp to camp, as explained in lines 4 and 5.
   poring dark, darkness through which one has to peer or pore. Compare 'pale policy' in the chorus of act ii, and other instances in this chorus where the adjective has reference to persons.
3. fills. The verb is singular because the two subjects, 'creeping murmur' and 'poring darkness', form but one idea, viz. night.
   the wide vessel of the universe, the broad bowl-like shape of the sky above and around.
6. that, so that.
8. paly, pale.
9. battle, army prepared for battle.
   umber'd, shadowed.
12. accomplishing, completing their equipment.
16. drowsy morning. Vide note to line 2.
18. over-lusty, over-lively.
19. do the low-rated English play at dice, i.e. the prisoners they anticipate taking on the morrow they play for as their stakes at dice. Holinshed writes: "The Frenchmen in the meanwhile, as though they had been sure of victory, made great triumph, for the captains had determined before how to divide the spoil, and the soldiers the night before had played the Englishmen at dice".
20. tardy-gaited, slow-paced.
21. who is used instead of which in reference to objects that are personified, like night in the preceding line.
23. watchful fires. See note to line 2.
25. gesture, look, appearance.
28. so, as so.
31. him. The antecedent of 'who'. Let him who will behold, &c.
36. enroimded, surrounded.
37. There is no paleness in his cheeks in acknowledgment of the power of a sleepless night.
39. over-bears attaint, gets the better of the influences which endeavour to infect him with sleepiness.
43. universal like the sun: which rises "on the evil and on the good".
45. cold fear. See note, line 2.
46. as may unworthiness define, as we are about to describe feebly.
51. right; an adverb.
53. minding, calling to mind, forming a notion.
35-47. Paraphrased:—His royal face gives no indication that a formidable army has surrounded him. Notwithstanding he has been on the watch all the night, he has lost none of his colour, but looks fresh and cheerful, completely conquering the ill effects of his surroundings. In consequence every pale and dejected wretch brightens up at the sight of him, and (to describe it inadequately) his cheering influence, like the sun, braces up the spirits of all, whatever their rank, as they catch a glimpse of him during the night.

Act IV Scene 1

4. some soul, some hidden principle.
7. husbandry, economy, thrift.
8. they, the French.
our outward consciences; doing from without us a work similar to that which conscience does within.
10. dress us, prepare ourselves.
12. make a moral of the devil, extract a moral lesson out of the subject of the devil himself.
16. likes, pleasures.
19. upon example, as the result of example (in others).
23. slough, the cast-off skin of a snake.
legerity, lightness, nimbleness. (Fr. légèreté.)
24. The king borrows the cloak for disguise.
26. do my good morrow to them. Cf. Julius Caesar, iv. 2. 5, "To do you salutation".
anon, at the same time. (A. S. on an, in one.)
32. would, would have.
37. discuss unto me; Pistol's bombast for 'tell me'.
38. popular, of the lower sort.
44. See act iii. 2. 24.
45. imp; literally an offspring.
48. bully. Used much in the same sense as bawcock.
51. I am a Welshman; because he was born at Monmouth.
55. Saint Davy's day, March 1st. St. David is the patron saint of Wales.
60. figo. See note, iii. 6. 56.
63. sorts, agrees.
65. speak lower. "Henry had commanded silence through his army, on pain, to a gentleman, of forfeiting horse and armour, and to an inferior, of losing an ear."
66. admiration, wonder.
87. be. Be is used with some notion of doubt after verbs of thinking (Abbott).
96. estate, condition.
97. sand, sand-bank.
103. element, sky.
shows, appears.
106, 107. higher mounted, stoop. Terms taken from the language of falconry. When a hawk, after mounting aloft, swooped down upon its prey, it was said to 'stoop'.
116. at all adventures. As we say now, 'at all hazards'.
118. troth, faith,
my conscience, what I really think.
122. a many. See iii. 7. 47.
125. feel, to get at, to sound.
137. the latter day, the last day.
140, 141. children rawly left, left without due provision being made for them.
143. when blood is their argument, when the shedding of blood is their purpose.
145, 146. against all proportion of subjection, against all proper duty of a subject.
148. do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, perish at sea in the midst of his sins.
152, 153. irreconciled iniquities, iniquities for which he has not obtained pardon, or become reconciled to heaven.
156. endings, the end his soldiers come to.
157. they purpose not their death, &c., they have no design of bringing about their death when they think of engaging their services.
162. contrived murder, murder that has been planned.
163. the broken seals of perjury, seals or vows broken by perjury.
164. They have gone to the wars to escape imprisonment.
166, 167. native punishment, punishment in their native land.
168. beadle, one who bids persons appear at court to make answer.
169. before-breach, previous breaking.
147-184. The student should make an analysis of Henry's argument.
173. unprovided, unprepared.
180. the time was blessedly lost, the time was well spent.
182. making God so free an offer, giving God, if one may so speak, such a good opportunity of taking away his life.
189, 190. he would not be ransomed, i.e. he would rather perish than allow himself to be taken prisoner.
197. an elder-gun, a pop-gun, made by taking the pith out of a stick of elder. Williams here means that the displeasure of a poor and private person against a monarch is about as deadly in its effects as the shot of a pop-gun.
198, 199. go about to turn, set about turning.
202. too round. We still speak of abusing a man 'roundly'.
207. gage, token, pledge.
214. take, give.
221. enow, the plural form of 'enough'.
224. crowns. With a pun, of course, upon 'heads'.
225, 226. to cut French crowns. To deface English coins was treason for an Englishman.
229. careful, anxious for our safety, oppressed with care.
232, 233. subject to the breath of every fool, exposed to the comments of every fool.
233. whose sense, &c., whose sensibility is such that he can only feel his own distresses.
234. but; used instead of 'than' after a comparative with a negative.
235. neglect, do without.
243. what is thy soul of adoration? The word soul is here used much as in line 4 of this scene. "What is the real nature of the adoration paid thee?" (Wright). "What is the soul of thy adoration?" meaning What is the essential nature of the adoration paid thee?
249, 250. Fall sick, and you will soon know the worthlessness of the flattery that has showered titles upon you.
253. flexure, bowing.
258. balm, the anointing oil used at coronations.
260. intertissued robe, &c., the robe interwoven with gold and pearl.
261. farced title, a title stuffed out or made pompous, such as ‘His Most Gracious Majesty’.

264. ceremony; vocative.

268. distressful bread, bread which the peasant has been distressed to get, and perhaps distressed in eating it on account of its coarseness.

271. in the eye of Phoebus, in the glare of the sun.

273. Hyperion, another name for the sun-god, who was fabled to traverse the heavens with chariot and horses. Hence the line put into plain prose equals, He gets up at sunrise or just before.

278. had, would have.

279. a member of, a participator in.

280. it, i.e. the peace.

282. whose hours, &c., the hours of which advantage the peasant best, i.e. benefit him most. ‘Peasant’ is the object of the verb ‘advantages’, which ought properly to be plural in agreement with ‘hours’, but its singular form is due to the nearness of the singular noun ‘peasant’.

292. compassing, obtaining. (With the idea also of plotting, or so contriving matters as to obtain.)

293. Richard’s body. Henry had the body of Richard II removed from Langley in Hertfordshire and interred in Westminster Abbey.

299. chantries, chapels where masses are chan ted for the souls of the dead. The two chantries here spoken of were called Bethlem and Sion, and were built on opposite sides of the Thames near Richmond.

Act IV—Scene 2

4. via! les eaux et la terre, away o’er water and land.

5. rien puis? l’air et le feu, nothing besides? Not the other two elements you mentioned? air and fire. (See act iii. 7. 20.) ‘Yes,’ says the Dauphin, ‘heaven also.”

11. dout, extinguish; overwhelm. The word is a contraction of do out, as ‘don’ is of do on, and ‘doff’ of do off. The English are to be quenched with the blood (courage) of which the French horses have enough and to spare.

18. shales, shells.

21. curtle-axe, a corruption of cutlass. (Fr. coutelas.)

27. action, activity.

29. hilding, paltry; worthless.

31. speculation, onlooking.

32. but that our honours must not, but our honour must not allow that.

35. tucket. See note, act iii. 6. 105.

sonance, sound.
36. dare the field, paralyse the enemy with fear. The phrase is taken from the language of falconry. A bird was said to be 'dared' when terrified from rising by the hawk hovering above. See the reference to falconry in the last scene.

39. carrions. This opprobrious term is used of the English because of their distressed condition and ill-favoured appearance.

41. ragged curtains, tattered colours.

42. passing, exceedingly; surpassingly.

43. big Mars seems bankrupt, &c. The mighty god of war cuts but a sorry appearance in their beggar'd host, i.e. all martial spirit and bearing seemed to be absent.

44. beaver, the lower part of the front of a helmet.

45. fixed candlesticks. "Ancient candlesticks were frequently in the form of human figures, holding the sockets for the light in their outstretched hands."

47. lop, to droop.

48. down-roping, the rheum hanging down like rope.

49. gimmal bit, a kind of double bit; or consisting of rings linked together. (L. gemellus, twin.)

51. executors. The crows were to have the disposal of the English, as the executors of a deceased man dispose of his estate.

60. guidon, standard.

61. trumpet, trumpeter. Holinshed writes: "They thought themselves so sure of victory that divers of the noblemen made such haste towards the battle that they left many of their servants and men of war behind them, and some of them would not once stay for their standards: as, among others, the Duke of Brabant, when his standard was not come, caused a banner to be taken from a trumpet and fastened to a spear, the which he commanded to be borne before him instead of his standard."

62. for, because of.

Act IV—Scene 3

10. kinsman, viz. Westmoreland, to whom he was related by marriage.

14. the firm truth of valour, true and firm valour.

26. yearns, grieves.

36. let him depart. "Henry begins by dictating a proclamation, and then passes into the imperative of the proclamation itself" (Abbott). He in the preceding line is thus left without a predicate.

37. convoy, conveyance.

39. that fears his fellowship to die with us. That fears to keep fellowship with us in death.

40. the feast of Crispian; October 25th. The festival was founded in honour of Crispinus and Crispianus, two brothers, born at Rome, who travelled to Soissons in France to spread Christianity. Here they exercised the craft of shoemaking that they might be independent of others' support. Eventually they suffered martyrdom during the persecutions in the time of the Emperor Diocletian, A.D. 303. Hence they became the patron saints of shoemakers.

45. vigil, eve of the feast.
50. with advantages, i.e. with additions.
62. vile, lowly in birth. Notice the change in the meaning of this word and of the word villain.
63. gentle his condition, raise him to the rank of a gentleman. "Those who fought with the king at Agincourt were allowed to wear coats of arms, and were given the chief seats at all feasts and public meetings."
68. bestow yourself, take up your position.
69. bravely, with a brave display.
70. expediency, expedition; speed.
76. thou hast unwish'd five thousand men. Shakespeare is not very particular about figures, as instance the numbers given in Canterbury's speech on the Salic law (act i. sc. 2). In this same scene (1. 3) Westmoreland mentioned the number of the French to be 60,000, which Exeter declared to be five to one, thus making the English 12,000.
80. compound, arrange; settle.
83. englutted, swallowed up.
86. retire, retirement.
91. achieve, capture.
96. native graves, graves in their own land.
97. shall witness live in brass, shall a record be inscribed upon brazen tablets.
105-107. Does killing refer to the bullets or to 'that'? If to the bullets the lines mean that as a bullet after it has reached its mark may bound off, strike some other object, and kill in a return (relapse) to its deadliness, so the dead English shall, having fought the French while alive, breed pestilence amongst them when dead. The more natural interpretation is to take killing as qualifying 'that'—the English kill the French even in the act of returning to their original dust.
109. warriors for the working-day, i.e. not carpet-knights, or warriors for show and parade.
112. not a piece of feather in their caps, by way of decoration.
114. slovenry, slovenliness; want of trimness.
117. in fresher robes, from the spoil they take; or, if need be, they will pluck, &c.
119. turn them out of service, by depriving them of their uniforms.
124. as, in the condition.
130. vaward, vanguard.
Act IV—Scene 4

4. calmie custure me. Probably mere jargon; supposed, however, by some to be Pistol’s rendering of “Callino castore me,” the burden of an old Irish song. A very plausible reading suggested is, “Cality! construe me,” which would be quite in Pistol’s style.

9. fox, a fancy term for a sword. The name was originally applied to those swords that had a fox engraved on the blade as a trade mark.

11. egregious, more than ordinary.

13. moy. Pistol evidently thinks this to be a coin of some kind.

14. rim, the midriff, a muscle or membrane separating the chest from the abdomen.

22. me. Notice this old dative use again in iv. 6. 21.

28. firk, beat.

29. ferret, worry.

37. permafoy; for par ma foi.

69, 70. this roaring devil i’ the old play. In the old plays called “Moralities” the Devil and a buffoon named Vice were prominent characters. The former had long hooked nails and cloven feet; the latter was armed with a wooden dagger, with which he belaboured the fiend till he made him roar, and sometimes attempted to pare his nails.

that, in regard to whom.

70, 71. every one may pare his nails, &c.; i.e. everyone might clip his claws, or, as we say, take it out of him.

73. adventurously, boldly.

Act IV—Scene 5

5. sits. The verb is singular, because the two nominatives, ‘reproach’ and ‘shame’, form but one idea.

7. perdurable, everlasting. The accent is on the first syllable.

13. on heaps, in heaps, in a swarm.

Act IV—Scene 6

8. larding the plain, fattening or enriching the plain with his blood.

9. honour-owing, honour-owning, honourable.

11. haggled, hacked, mangled.

21. raught, reached.

26, 27. seal’d a testament, confirmed an oath.

31. all my mother, the softer side of my nature.

34. issue, melt into tears.

37. kill; used imperatively: let every soldier kill, &c.

then every soldier kill his prisoners. Henry feared that, hampered with prisoners, his men might be unable to meet the new onslaught. Gower, however, in the next scene, says that the order was given in anger at the murder of the boys, who were guarding the baggage, by the French fugitives.

Act IV—Scene 7

1. kill the poys and the luggage. Fluellen of course means 'kill the boys and plunder the baggage'. Refer to the last lines of scene iv.

2. arrant, gross, villainous.

32, 33. indifferent well, tolerably well.

33. figures, similes, comparisons.

58. void, leave.

60. skirr, scurry.

61. enforced, driven.

62. those we have. See lines 9, 10 of this scene. Evidently some of the prisoners had been spared.

68. fined, awarded.

72. look, take note of.

74. woe the while! alas the day!

76. vulgar, common soldiers.

78. fret, chafe.

79. yerk, jerk.

91. your grandfather, your great-grandfather (Edward III).

98. wearing leeks, &c. Tradition says that on the day the Welsh put to rout their Saxon invaders St. David ordered his men to wear leeks in their caps to distinguish them from their foes. The leek thus became the national emblem of the Welsh, it being the custom to wear it on St. David's day, March 1st.

99. Monmouth caps. Monmouth was formerly celebrated for its caps, which were particularly worn by soldiers.

116. just notice, a correct account.

121. an't, if it.

134, 135. of great sort, of high rank.

135. quite from the answer of his degree, altogether free from the necessity of answering the challenge of one of such low station as Williams.

140. a Jacksauce, a saucy-Jack, a rascal.

143. sirrah; used towards an inferior, also in anger and contempt.

153. Alençon. "The king that day showed himself a valiant knight, albeit almost felled by the Duke of Alençon; yet with plain strength he slew two of the duke's company, and felled the duke himself; whom, when he would have yielded, the king's guard (contrary to his mind) slew out of hand" (Holinshed).
Act IV—Scene 8

2. apace, quickly.

9. 's blood; an abbreviation of God's blood, as zounds is of God's wounds. Thus swearing by the blood and wounds of our Lord was very common.

21. contagious; probably for 'outrageous'.

29. in change, in exchange.

46. all offences, &c.; i.e. all real offences are done intentionally.

52. garments, the cloak of Sir Thomas Erpingham, which the king had borrowed to conceal his own dress.

73. here is the number of the slaughter'd French. The herald here delivers a paper.

74. of good sort, of high rank.

87. sixteen hundred mercenaries. Again the figures will not bear closely looking into. The number 126 mentioned above is ignored, but Holinshed, from whom the whole passage is taken, puts the matter in a slightly different way, viz.: "Of the meaner sort, not more than 1600 fell".

103. Davy Gam. A pleasing anecdote is told of this brave Welshman. "Having been sent out by Henry before the battle to reconnoitre the enemy, and find out their strength, he made this report: 'May it please you, my liege, there are enough to be killed, enough to be taken prisoners, and enough to run away'."

105. but five and twenty. A more trustworthy account gives the number at 1600.

122. 'non nobis', the first words of a verse of the Latin version of one of the Psalms: "Non nobis Domine, non nobis, sed nomini tuo da gloriam".

Act V

PROLOGUE.—The chorus again begs the audience to excuse the poorness of the representation; to imagine the king's arrival at Calais, his passage across to England, the vast concourse assembled on the shore to greet him; his arrival in London, where the mayor and his brethren, and all the citizens, pour forth to welcome and acclaim the conqueror, just as would have been the case had Essex at that time been returning successful from Ireland. The visit of the German Emperor as a mediator between England and France is then mentioned; and lastly, the king's return back again to France.

SCENE I.—The opening scene ought properly to form part of act iv, since it is laid in the English camp before the king's departure for England. Fluellen having been mockingly hidden by Pistol the day before to eat the leek he was wearing, now makes Pistol himself eat it, to the accompaniment of blows from his cudgel. Pistol's last speech shows that the much-deserved punishment had wrought no repentance in him.

......
Scene II.—A meeting takes place between Henry and the French king, at which are present Queen Isabel, Princess Katharine, and the leading noblemen of both countries. The Duke of Burgundy, by whom this great assemblage is brought about, makes an eloquent speech in favour of peace, describing the wild and ruinous condition of their land, and the uncivilizing effects of war. Henry replies that the desired peace is entirely conditional upon the acceptance of his demands. To reconsider these more closely, the French king retires, and with him certain of the English retinue, whom, at his suggestion, Henry appointed to sit with him in conference, giving them full power to ratify, alter, or augment any of the stipulations put forward. Queen Isabel also joins the council.

Left alone with Katharine, Henry successfully pleads his suit to her, although, as he protested, he could only speak to her ‘plain soldier’.

At the conclusion of his wooing, those that have been in council return, Westmoreland informing Henry that every article in the treaty had been agreed to. Henry then personally requests the French king to give him his daughter. The king consents, expressing the hope that peace and concord might henceforth exist between England and France; and Queen Isabel, that the marriage might unite the two kingdoms in close alliance and friendship.

Epilogue.—The chorus once more enters, and delivers an epilogue apologizing for the inability of the author to do justice to his subject, and stating that in the short time embraced by the events of the play “Most greatly lived this star of England”; that he was succeeded by his infant son, Henry VI, whose ministers so mismanaged matters “that they lost France and made England bleed.”

Act V—Prologue

2. of. Perhaps Shakespeare meant to write ‘of such as have I humbly pray that they’, &c.

10. pales in the flood, fences in the sea.

12. whiffler, one who heads a procession and clears the way. Two explanations are given of the origin of this word:—(1) that ‘whiffle’ was another name for a fife, and that as fifers commonly marched at the head of troops and processions the term ‘whiffler’ came to be used of anyone who went in front of a procession to clear the way; (2) that the word is derived from the verb ‘whiffle’, to disperse as by a puff of wind, and that the name ‘whiffler’ was given to a staff-bearer in a procession, who, as he went along, kept his staff in constant motion, whiffling the air on either side.

17. where that. See lines 34 and 46 of act v. sc. 2 for similar compounds.

borne. If this word be taken after ‘sword’ in the next line the sense will be brought out more clearly.

21. signal, sign; symbol. Has much the same meaning as trophy.

ostent, display; show (of victory).

22. quite from. See iv. 7. 135.

29. The line seems to mean 'Comparing Henry's triumph with that of a subject, which though not so great a matter would cause deep gratification'.

30. The general, the Earl of Essex, who was sent to Ireland in March, 1599, to put down the rebellion of Tyrone. He set out amid the enthusiasm of the people, who expected brilliant things of him; but the expedition proved an utter failure. He returned the following September. This reference shows that the play must have been acted between March and September, 1599, and thus helps to fix the date of its composition.

Empress, Queen Elizabeth.

32. Broached, transfixed.

34. And much more cause, and with much more cause.

38. The emperor, Sigismund, emperor of Germany, who was mar-rried to a cousin of Henry’s, and who came as a mediator in May, 1416.

The emperor's coming. Does this mean 'The emperor is coming', or are we to understand 'Remember the visit of the emperor'?

39. To order, to arrange.

43. Remembering, reminding.

44. Brook abridgement, put up with this shortening or curtailment of events.

Act V—Scene 1

5. Scald, scabby; scurvy.

19. Bedlam, mad. The word is a corruption of Bethlehem, that was formerly the name of a monastery in London, afterwards converted into an asylum for lunatics.

Trojan, a cant term, generally used in reproach.

20. Fold up Parca's fatal web; i.e. kill thee. The Parcae or the Fates were three goddesses who presided over the destiny of each individual. One held the distaff, another spun the thread of human life, and the third cut it off when the fated time was come.

28. Cadwallader, the last of the Welsh kings.

41. Green, fresh.

51. Much good (may it) do you.

56. Groat, an old silver coin of the value of fourpence.

70. Predeceased valour, past valour. The adjective, of course, really refers to the persons who displayed the valour. For the reference see note, act iv. 7. 98.

Avouch, make good.

71. Gleeking, jeering; shouting.

72. Galling, scolling in an irritating manner.

76. Condition, behaviour; disposition.

78. Play the huswife, play the jilt.
84. something lean to cutpurse, &c., to some extent take to thieving.

86. cudgell'd scars, scars obtained through a cudgelling.

Act V—Scene 2

1. wherefore we are met. These words need to be taken after "peace", thus—Peace, for which we are met, be to this meeting.

16. bent, a word used in a double sense: (1) glance; (2) aim.

17. balls. There is also a play on this word, both eyeballs and cannon-balls being alluded to.

basilisks. Another word of double meaning: (1) a fabulous serpent, whose glance was sufficient to kill; (2) a kind of large cannon.

15-17. Your eyes, which hitherto have been like basilisks, carrying fatal balls against the French when turned on them.

23. on, in.

27. bar, a place of meeting. "The word is a shortened form of 'barrier'. Ordinarily when sovereigns were to meet in the field for the purposes of conference, a barrier was erected at the place agreed upon, as a protection of either party against the possible violence or treachery of the other. Hence 'bar' came to be used of any place of meeting."

28. mightiness. The plural and also the possessive terminations are often omitted in the case of words ending in 'ss' or in a similar sound. See i. 2. 36.

31. congreeted, greeted each other.

33. rub. See ii. 2. 188.

37. put up, show.

40. it. The true possessive both of 'he' and 'it' is 'his' (see i. 1. 36 and i. 1. 66). In the fourteenth century the simple form 'it' came to be used instead for the neu. poss. This form was the one commonly used till beyond the time of Shakespeare, who, however, occasionally uses the modern form 'its'.

42. even-pleach'd, evenly intertwined, and hence trimmed. (The word is derived through the French from Lat. plieare, to fold.)

45. darnel, a weed like rye-grass.

fumitory, a weed that grows freely among corn.

46. doth. Sing., because the three preceding nouns form but one idea, viz. a mass of weeds.

coultor, ploughshare. (Lat. culter.)

47. deracinate, root up. (Fr. déraciner; Lat. radix, root.)

48. erst, formerly.

49. burnet, a plant good for wounds.

51. nothing teems, brings forth nothing.

52. kecksies, a kind of hemlock.

55. defective in their natures, not performing their natural office.
61. defused, disordered.
63. favour, favourable appearance.
65. let, an old word meaning hindrance; obstacle; of quite a different derivation to the common word ‘let’, permit; one being from A.S. leltan, to hinder, the other from A.S. letan, to permit.
68. would, desire.
77. cursorary, cursory; hasty.
79. presently, immediately.
81. suddenly, at once.
82. accept. Either short for ‘acceptance’ or ‘accepted’, probably the former. An ‘accepted answer’ would doubtless mean ‘an answer embodying what we have accepted’.
94. too nicely urged, urged too finely, or with too great particularly.
121. dat is de princess, that is what the princess says.
122. the princess is the better Englishwoman. He probably means that the princess is better at English than her maid.
134. you undid me, you would undo me; i.e. you would nonplus me entirely.
135. measure, rhythm; again used in the sense of dancing—dancing in time or measure to music.
141. bound my horse, make my horse curvet.
142, 143. a jack-an-apes, a monkey.
144. greenly, foolishly, or awkwardly, like a young lover.
146. for urging, through being urged to.
149, 150. let thine eye be thy cook, a cook will serve up a plain dish daintily; the princess is to perform a similar office with Henry’s looks.
150. plain soldier. Used adverbially; as a plain soldier
152. for thy love, because of love for thee.
154. uncoined, natural.
160. will fall, i.e. will fall away; lose shape.
182. je quand sur le possession. Henry is trying to say: “Quand j’aurai la possession de France, et quand vous aurez la,” &c.
184. Saint Denis be my speed, St. Denis give me a helping hand.
St. Denis was the patron saint of France.
192. truly-falsely; truly as regards the sentiment, falsely as regards the pronunciation and grammar.
193. much at one, much the same.
205. with schembling, by contending; by struggling.
214. untempering, unsouthing; not winning.
214, 215. beshrew, a mild kind of oath.
220. layer-up, preserver.
245. de votre seigneurie. These words would be put after 'serviteur' in modern French.
259. nice, fastidious; precise.
261. list, limits. "In a tournament the space enclosed for the combatants was called the lists."
276. apt, quick to learn; ready to respond.
283, 284. you must make a circle. "Conjurors used to mark out a circle on the ground, within which their conjuring was to take effect."
293. perspectively, as through a perspective glass, which was so contrived as to give an illusive view of the objects seen through it.
300. for my wish, to my wish, which was to capture these maiden cities. Henry had wanted to capture the cities but had wooed the maid instead, now having won her he wins the cities also.
305. according to their firm proposed natures, i.e. according as they were originally set forth, and firmly adhered to.
308. for matter of grant, in the matter of granting rights or privileges.
311. praeclarissimus. Shakespeare here follows Holinshed. In the original treaty the word corresponding to 'très-cher' is praecarissimus.
322. conjunction, union.
333. ill office, anything ill done on the part of others.
fell, cruel, bitter.
335. paction, agreement.
337. that English may as French, &c. The grammar of this is certainly peculiar, but Shakespeare evidently means, that English may receive Frenchmen as Englishmen, as brothers, and vice versa.
sennet, "a particular set of notes on a trumpet, which were played to announce the approach or departure of a procession".

Epilogue

2. bending, beneath the weight of his task or subject.
7. best garden. See Burgundy's speech in the last scene.
13. which oft our stage hath shown. The three parts of Shakespeare's Henry V had been already written and performed.
for their sake. These words seem rather vaguely used. 'Their' can only refer grammatically to 'they' in the preceding line. Hence the meaning appears to be, 'to make up for their shortcomings'.
14. let this acceptance take, let the subject of this play meet with (better) acceptance.
I. DATE OF THE PLAY

In the chorus to act v occur the following lines:—

"Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached on his sword,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him!"

There is here an obvious reference to the Earl of Essex's expedition to Ireland in 1599, and unless this passage was added after the completion of the play, that year must be the date of its composition. But even assuming the lines to be an after-insertion, they would at any rate show that the play was acted in 1599.

As regards the date of its publication there is no doubt. It was first printed in 1600, and reprinted in 1602 and 1608. In these editions, known as "the Quartos", the play was scarcely half its present length, the choruses, several entire scenes, and some of the finest passages being absent. These, however, were added in the folio edition of 1623, which is accordingly the chief authority for the text, though the quartos give help in amending the errors and defects of the later copy.

It is thought, with some degree of probability, that the folio alone gives Shakespeare's original work, that this was abridged for stage purposes, and that from this abridgment a still further incomplete and defective copy was fraudulently obtained for publication and appeared in the quarto editions.

For the historical facts Shakespeare is chiefly indebted to the historian Holinshed, whose Chronicles were published for the second time in 1587.

The play of Henry V is to some extent a continuation of that of Henry IV, having in common with it the characters of Henry himself, the Dukes of Bedford and Gloucester, and several other nobles, also Gower, Bardolph, Pistol, and Mistress Quickly. The last three characters, together with Nym, are also found in the Merry Wives of Windsor. It is worth notice that a George Bardolph and a William Fluellen were townsmen of Shakespeare's at Stratford.

In the epilogue to Henry IV the speaker says, "Our humble author will continue the story with Sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Catherine of France,"—a promise for some reason not fully carried out, since the knight does not figure in the play at all, the only mention of him being a communication by the boy that he was very ill, a description of his death-scene by Mrs. Pistol, and a passing reference to him by Fluellen as "the fat knight with the great belly-doublet," whom the king had turned away.

The great defect of the play is its continuation after the chief event—the battle of Agincourt. The last act is poor, and devoid of interest. Between the fourth and fifth acts there is an interval of four or five years. The campaign of 1417-1418, resulting in the conquest of the greater part of Normandy, and the capture of Rouen after a fearful siege, is entirely passed over, and also the negotiations with the Duke of Burgundy which led to the conference at Troyes.

2. HISTORICAL INACCURACIES

1. The Duke of Exeter in the first four acts should be only the Earl of Dorset. He was not raised to the dukedom till 1416.

2. Charlemain should be Charles the Bald.

3. Louis X should be Louis IX.

4. Bedford was neither present at Harfleur nor at Agincourt. He was regent of England during the king's absence. Also Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, and the Dauphin were not present at Agincourt.

5. The wish for 10,000 more men, attributed to Westmoreland, was really uttered by Sir Walter Hungerford.

6. Charles VI was not present at Troyes to witness the betrothal of his daughter to Henry.
3. CRITICAL APPRECIATION

The two Parts of Henry IV and the play of Henry V, written shortly after them, and forming a sequel to them, together constitute that group of English Histories, belonging to the middle period of Shakespeare's career, in which History and Comedy are mingled in almost equal proportions, in which the character-drawing is most masterly, and the literary expression most faultless. In the earliest group of plays dealing with English History, the three parts of Henry VI and Richard III, Shakespeare is working on the lines of, or in conjunction with, others, and in the spirit rather of Marlowe than of his gentler and profounder self: in the transitional plays, Richard II and King John, while freeing himself from Marlowe's influence and gaining in subtlety and variety, he has not attained to full mastery of his powers, and betrays a young man's weakness for verbal conceits and lyrical prettinesses. The expression sometimes outruns the thought, just as in the plays written at the end of his life the thought often outruns the expression. In Henry IV and Henry V thought and expression are in the noblest harmony and balance. To quote Mr. Swinburne¹—

"It is in the middle period of his work that the language of Shakespeare is most limpid in its fulness, the style most pure, the thought most transparent through the close and luminous raiment of perfect expression. The conceits and crudities of the first stage are outgrown and cast aside: the harshness and obscurity which at times may strike us as among the notes of his third manner have as yet no place in the flawless work of this his second stage." And further,² "The rippest fruit of historic or national drama, the consummation and the crown of Shakespeare's labours in that line, must of course be recognized and saluted by all students in the supreme and sovereign trilogy of King Henry IV and *King Henry V".

But Henry V, as has been said, is not only a work of the same period, and of the same general character as the two Parts of Henry IV, it is the sequel to them, and can only be fully understood in the light of them. To the audience of 1599 assembled to see the new play, Harry the King and his brothers, Westmoreland and Warwick, Falstaff and his boy, Bardolph, Pistols and Gower were old acquaintances; all had played their parts in Henry IV; the latter of them with Nym had figured also in the Merry Wives of Windsor. It is clear that, thoroughly to enter into the characters of our play, we must have a similar acquaintance with the plays which had gone before.

¹ Study of Shakespeare, p. 66. ² Ib. p. 68.

But if there is this close bond of union between Henry V and the two parts of Henry IV there are also points of contrast. In the Epilogue to Henry IV, Part 2, the audience had been prepared for a new play in which the comic element should still centre round the figure of Falstaff: "If you be not too much cloyed with fat meat", they had been told, "our humble author will continue the story with Sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France; where for anything I know" (i.e. 'I, the speaker of the Epilogue') "Falstaff shall die of a sweat". It can hardly be said that this promise was fulfilled. When the story was continued, it appeared that Sir John was, after all, not in it. Hostess Quickly told how he had died: and that was all. The scenes of frolic and wine-bibbing and practical joking, the encounters of wit and chaff in which the unwieldy knight and his sweet Hal had so often taken part together were over and done, and from the point of view of pure comedy the new play was the worse for the change. Falstaff was ill replaced by Pistol and Fluellen and the fair Katharine of France.

Shakespeare, for some reason, had departed from his original purpose. And perhaps the reason is not far to seek. It sprang out of the circumstances treated in the play. So long as Henry had been merely Prince of Wales, he had had none of the responsibility of government. Born with a healthy genial nature, and an honest love of truth and reality, he could not be content to pass the May morn of his youth in the close atmosphere of statecraft and dissimulation: he must go out from his father's court, mix with all conditions of men, see things from all sides, and while seeming only to laugh, feel within himself that he was learning to understand, (among other things to understand the worthlessness of his associates). And so in the play of Henry IV he is the link which binds the serious and the comic characters together.

But with the Prince's succession to the throne he can no longer, if he is a worthy man, live the same life. What he has learnt must now be put in practice: the cares of state, the good people will tax all his powers. And, since there is a higher duty than loyalty to old companions, the first act of Henry's new time must be that described in 2 Henry IV, v. 4, the dismissal of his old boonfellows. And so Falstaff's expectation of new favours is bitterly disappointed. As he accosts his old associate in a public place,

"My King! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!"

he is answered even harshly:

"I know thee not, old man; fall to thy prayers:
Presume not that I am the thing I was;
For God doth know, so shall the world perceive,
That I have turned away my former self,
So will I those that keep me company."

It was no doubt well that the King's action should be thus decisive, and that when we see him first in the play which bears his name, he should show nothing of his 'wilder days' except the use he made of them. But his action, if right, was still, even towards that 'grey iniquity', Falstaff, somewhat cruel, as right actions are sometimes; and Shakespeare seems to have felt that it would be too much to expect the old man to make mirth any more. So with the highest art he tells us how he died: tells us this by the mouth of a coarse and common woman, and yet with such a subtle appeal to our humanity in the suggestion of the half-return to childhood before death that our last thought of Falstaff is a kind one. "The King has killed his heart." "Fal-staff is dead, and we must yearn therefore."

With Falstaff dismissed or dead, the King is completely separated from the low characters, Bardolph and Pistol, whom he had once known as Falstaff's satellites. They and Nym furnish scenes of comic relief to the loftier interest of the play; but in these scenes the King has no part. The good Fluellen amuses the audience with his pedantry, his hot blood and his bad English—and Henry knows him, likes him, and talks with him, but himself contributes little to the comedy of the situation.
Whereas in Henry IV he was the centre of the comic scenes, here he is apart from them: and the consequence is a double one—while the comic scenes are the poorer for the loss both of Falstaff and Hal, the character of Henry himself in its newfound singleness and consistency, in its heroic triumph over difficulties, in its devotion to a serious purpose, soars to heights unattained before, and becomes almost the all-sufficing interest of the new play.

We find then the key to Henry V in the character of the King, a character already formed when the play opens and only needing occasion to show its various capabilities. For it must be remarked that in Henry's soul we see no signs of internal conflict, present or past. The play, so far as he is concerned, will have none of that interest which we commonly look for in drama; the interest which is excited when one passion is seen contending with another in the same human breast, so that the victory of this or that is ever in suspense. Nor will it have the interest of curiosity which attaches to the presentation of a character warped and twisted by previous ill-doing.

Whatever the furnace through which Henry has passed, he has come out of it unscathed, nay, nobly tempered. His sweet nature has been able to take all the good and leave the evil: it has grown, as the Bishop of Ely says, like the strawberry underneath the nettle. In his prayer to God not to remember his father's sin against him, there is, as Mr. Morris remarks, no confession of an ill-spent youth.

And if we read the two parts of Henry IV with attention, we shall see how carefully Shakespeare points out that the Prince was never enslaved by evil passions, never in his merriest moods blind to unworthiness about him, but was content to be misjudged, content with anything rather than to be thought a hypocrite, while he waited for the day when he should show himself in his true colours.

"Who! I rob? I, a thief? not I, by my faith", he protests (Pt. 1. i. 1. 85), and when he has fallen in with Poins's plot to have a laugh out of Falstaff, he is made in a soliloquy to show the terms on which he acts (i. 2. 240):

"I'll so offend to make offence a skill;
Redeeming time when men least think I will".

And discriminating observers were not deceived in him. Vernon, after praising his agility and horsemanship (iv. 1) and the modesty with which he challenged Hotspur (v. 2), tells how he

"chid his truant youth with such a grace
As if he mastered there a double spirit"
Of teaching and of learning instantly.
There did he pause; but let me tell the world
If he outlive the envy of this day,
England did never owe (= own) so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in his wantonness".

Henry’s gallantry in war already went far to justify Vernon’s words, but in Pt. II. iv. 4. 68, &c., Westmoreland reassures the troubled king on the prince’s relation to his riotous companions:

"The prince will in the perfectness of time
Cast off his followers; and their memory
Shall as a pattern or a measure live
By which his grace must mete the lives of others,
Turning past evils to advantages".

Shakespeare is far from teaching that an ordinary man can live among low surroundings and come out the better rather than the worse, and with this general moral question we have nothing to do. All I have tried to establish is this, that Henry V, as we find him at the opening of the play, has not passed through any process of violent conversion; nor does he carry within him a turmoil of contrary passions. The time that seemed mis-spent, thanks to a happy nature which rejected evil, had been indeed well spent. At the opening of Henry V the sound-hearted man, trained in the art of war, in observation of men, in a modest estimate of himself, stands ready to fight a battle with external circumstances, and to issue from it victorious. The play which tells the tale of that battle will be almost as much epic as drama.

Henry, then, as has been well said, represents the ideal man of action. There is no discord within the circle of his soul: his fightings are without. But the circle is to some extent a limited one. Henry has none of those soundings of the moral depths which we see in Hamlet—he is well content to accept on questions of right and wrong the decision of the Church. He does not shrink from severity in punishment or cruelty in war, but where severity and cruelty are demanded acts without a qualm. When he pleads with a lady for her love, it is in no terms of kindled imagination or poetry, but as ‘plain soldier’ making the offer of a ‘good heart’. It may be said by some that Shakespeare, whose spirit was itself so much vaster, means us to note with a touch of scorn these limitations in the King, to see in him indeed a great Englishman, but to wish at the same time that he were something more. But Shakespeare has no such intention. He, poet as he is, loves this 'plain soldier' from the bottom of his heart, and means us to do the same. Even to the all-embracing vision of a poet, the world can show nothing finer than a hero.

Henry is a man of conscience. He will not make an unjust war (i. 2).

He is already a prudent statesman. Before he resolves on going to France, he must be assured that England will be in no danger from the Scotch (i. 2). But if he is slow in coming to a resolution, when his resolution is taken he is incapable of faltering. He meets insult with scorn (i. 2).

When he is confronted by the treachery of his closest friends, his feeling rises above mere personal resentment in the sense of the ruin wrought by such treachery to man's confidence in man
(ii. 2). And this moral indignation of a noble character has its effect in producing compunction in the culprits. He inflicts the punishment of death in the spirit not of vindictiveness, but of that justice which is essential to the public good. "He has no weakness, not even the noble weakness of mercy" (Moulton).
In the hour of fighting he is a very tiger (iii. 1), but in his march through the enemy's country he will permit no sort of outrage or excess (iii. 6). When his situation becomes an anxious one, and the foe sends him a message of contemptuous defiance, he makes no secret of his enfeebled state, and still shows himself quietly undaunted.

"Yet, God before, tell him we will come on
Though France himself and such another neighbour
Stand in our way."

As Mr. Moulton says, "We listen for counter-defiance; but counter-defiance is, after all, following the enemy's lead, and Henry passes beyond it to the quietest possible ignoring of the elaborately framed challenge". And his quietude of mind rests on religious faith.

"We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs" (iii. 6).

In the night-scene before the battle of Agincourt (iv. 1) "his cheerfulness is unflagging and he can extract some soul of goodness from every dull surrounding". "As he moves about the camp in the darkness and accosts every variety of his followers, he catches instantly the exact tone in which to address each and call forth from each a characteristic flash of enthusiasm" (Moulton).

In his conversation with the soldiers (iv. 1) he shows that power of entering into the thoughts of common men which he had learnt in the freedom of his 'wild and days', although now his strain is a serious one.

Left alone, he passes through an inward crisis, almost overwhelmed in this hour of danger by the responsibility of kingship. Then falling on his knees, he prays God to give his soldiers courage and not to punish him for his father's usurpation of the crown.

Summoned to prepare for battle, he is once more the hero in action, and utters that speech of glowing valour, humorous realism, and generous comradeship which, as Kreyssig says, is "the highest example of heroic oratory in the whole literature of the world" (iv. 3).

Such is the leader of one of the armies that were to fight at Agincourt, such the truly English spirit which flamed in him to the point of heroism.

If we now compare Henry's antagonists with himself, we shall see a dramatic contrast of the most striking kind, the contrast between pretence and reality—boasting and modesty—trust in numbers and trust in God. This contrast is most marked in the person of the Dauphin, but it holds also with the French in general.

The gift of tennis balls (i. 2) is the first indication of the Dauphin's insolent spirit, and of that utter misconception of Henry's character which he expresses in words in ii. 4. In iii. 5 the same spirit of contempt is shown by the whole French Court, and seems justified, as men count chances, by the vast odds on their side. How can Henry do anything but sue for ransom, when—

"his numbers are so few,

His soldiers sick and famish'd on their march", and he has against him so many "high dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights"? And so follows the insolent message of iii. 6, to which Henry replies so quietly and so undauntedly. But the great contrast is presented on the night before the battle. While the English king goes the round of his dejected men, and lets them pluck comfort and new courage from his looks, the French princes are rhapsodizing over their horses, playing dice for the prisoners they have not yet taken, and sighing like children for the day (iii. 7). They make very light of the coming battle:

“A very little little let us do
And all is done”. (iv. 2.)

Aristocratic insolence, idle chatter, vaunting of numbers and armour and horses, this on the one side; and on the other, seriousness, forethought, modest courage, brotherliness, submission to God.

And this contrast gives a new character to the great central action of our play, the battle of Agincourt, which is now raised (in the words of Mr. Morris1) “from the historic level of a conflict between ‘two mighty monarchies’ to the epic height of a Divine decision and judgment. We are witnesses of something more than national prowess or personal achievement, however heroic”,—we witness the vindication by Divine Providence of that moral law in accordance with which wisdom prospers and folly perishes miserably.

And so when the little band of Englishmen has vanquished the hosts of the French, and when the list of the slain shows 25 dead on the one side and 10,000 on the other, Henry’s deep character, as Mr. Moulton says, “perceives a point beyond triumph”. “O God,” he cries, “Thy arm was here!”

And what has been the effect upon the audience of what they have seen? Surely in the first place a warm admiration for the hero King and his brave companions, and next a deepened sense of a Divine Power ruling the issues of events in righteousness. And with these feelings has come a third. The men who, under God, won the battle of Agincourt were Englishmen, and the virtues they showed there were the characteristic virtues of the best Englishmen in all ages. Could the descendants of these men see their deeds enacted without feeling, besides all other things, a quickened patriotism?

It has been convenient to consider the effect of the main sub-

1 Keynotes of Shakespeare’s Plays 1886, p. 19.
ject of the play before proceeding to touch on act v, in which the King appears in the character of a wooer. This scene was objected to by Dr. Johnson on the ground that the King had "neither the vivacity of Hal nor the grandeur of Henry". But Shakespeare showed a deeper artistic sense when he chose to end his play with this scene of merely playful love-making. To have heightened the tone and made Henry a Romeo, or on the other hand, to have made the scene wildly mirthful and the King a Hal, would have been to distract the attention of the audience from the main interest of the play and confuse the simple lines of Henry's character. The view of Henry which the poet wished to leave with them was that of the soldier-king: it was not to be confounded with any other presentation of him rivalling this in depth of interest.

As a matter of fact it is hard to imagine Shakespeare's Harry the Fifth, after years of statesmanship and campaigning, making love in a way very different from that which is represented.
But whether that be so or no, Shakespeare's treatment of the scene preserved the dramatic unity of the play and allowed the audience to go away, as Shakespeare intended, with their minds dwelling not on Harry the wooer, but on Harry, the victor of Agincourt.

In Henry V, as has been said already, History is wedded to Comedy. The comic scenes are of somewhat unequal merit: none of them, except the scene in which Falstaff's death is told, approach the great comic scenes of Henry IV. Yet these scenes serve the end which Shakespeare set before himself in his treatment of history, and they contain some carefully drawn characters whose humours are a perennial delight.

The secret of Shakespeare may be said to lie in his possessing two intellectual powers, each in the highest degree, powers never possessed in such perfect balance by any other man. The one power is the poet's deep perception of the Beautiful: the other, the realist's clear sight and enjoyment of this incongruous world of which Beauty forms so elusive an element. Some men have eyes for Beauty only, some only for its setting. Shakesppeare sees both and sees both at the same time, and in his art he uses each to throw up the other. Henry V and Fluellen shine out the more for not being in a sphere apart, but in the same world with Pistol and Nym, with them but not of them. And Shakespeare sees that the same law holds in the 'little world' of a single human soul. We love the good Fluellen the better for his pedantic oddity and his hot Welsh blood. Even the King himself becomes a more absolute hero for that blithe everyday humour and good-fellowship which brings him so near to us.

Bardolph and Nym and Pistol are indeed little better than cowardly scoundrels, the blackguards of the King's army, who have gone to France

"Like horse-leeches, my boys,
To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck";

and, when Bardolph and Nym have been hanged for their robberies and the braggart Pistol has been humiliated by Fluellen, we feel that they have well deserved their reward. And yet we have learned to know them so well, Bardolph the 'red-faced and white-livered', Pistol eternally quoting his bombastic scraps from bad plays, Nym with his monotonous slang of the day, that we have a sneaking liking for them all. And they too, as Shakespeare saw them, had some touches of better things. Bardolph has his word of regret for his old master Falstaff, "Would I were with him, wheresome'er he is, either in heaven or in hell", and Pistol his poor flash of admiration for the hero-king, "I love the lovely bully!" For the shrewd Boy who dies at Agincourt with the keepers of the baggage, we have a still livelier regret.

Henry V is wanting in dramatic development; in its inner structure as well as in the addition of its magnificent prologues, it partakes even of the character of an epic. Some of its comic scenes are poorer than those which we look for in Shakespeare. In some of the serious scenes, in his treatment of the French, Shakespeare may have seemed to descend to caricature, which we can only excuse by pleading that by this treatment he heightened the ethical significance of his main action, and that he tried to remove the offence at the end of the play by introducing the prayer in which we seem to hear his own voice—

"That never war advance
His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France".

But it is ungracious to point out defects where there is so much to admire. No play of Shakespeare, and to say this is to say, no work of imagination ever written, strikes so widely-vibrating a note. Lovers of poetry and eloquence will wonder for ever at its prologues and heroic speeches: lovers of Shakespeare and of Shakespeare's men will cherish in it a work in which the soul of Shakespeare reveals its ideal of a hero: lovers of humanity will rejoice in its folk-scenes, everywhere animated by the spirit of brotherhood between high and low. To Englishmen Henry V will ever be a trumpet-note, ringing with the achievements of a glorious past, and calling them to fresh achievements in the future.
BRIEF LIST OF EDUCATIONAL WORKS
PUBLISHED BY
BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED

Latin and Greek

Blackie's Illustrated Latin Series.

CAESAR—GALLIC WAR. Edited by Professor John Brown. Books I, II, III,
IV, 1s. 6d. each. Book V, 2s.

CICERO—THE CATILINE ORATIONS (Complete). Edited by C. Haines
Keene, M.A. 2s. 6d. THE FIRST ORA-
TION (Separately). 1s. 6d.

EUTROPLUS—Books I and II. Edited with W. Cecil Laming, M.A. 1s. 6d.

LIVY—Book I. Edited by Professor
John Brown. 2s. 6d.

LIVY—Books V and VI. Edited by
W. Cecil Laming, M.A. 2s. 6d. each.

HORACE—ODES. Edited by Stephen
Gwynn. Books I—IV, 1s. 6d. each.

OVID—METAMORPHOSES I. Edited by E. Bensor, B.A. 1s. 6d.

SALLUST—THE CATILINE CON-
SPIRACY. Edited by the Rev. W. A.
Stone, M.A. 1s. 6d.

TACITUS—AGRICOLA. Edited by
W. C. Flamstead Walters, M.A. 1s. 6d.

VIRGIL—AENEID I and VI. Edited by H. B. Cotterill, M.A. Book I, 2s.
Book VI, 1s. 6d.

VIRGIL—AENEID I and III. Edited by Professor Sanford, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.

VIRGIL—GEOGRAPHY I, II, IV. Edited by S. E. Winbolt, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.

Blackie's Illustrated Greek Series.

AESCHYLUS—EURYNEIDES. Edited
by L. D. Barnett, M.A., Ph.D. 3s. 6d

HOMER—ODYSSEY I. Edited by Rev. E. C. Everard Owen, M.A

Latin and Greek Texts.

A FIRST LATIN READER. With 67
Illustrations. By R. A. A. Beresford, M.A 1s. 6d.

CAESAR—GALLIC WAR. Edited, with Notes, by Professor John Brown
Illustrated. Books I, II, IV, V, and VI,
1s. 6d. each. Book III, 1s.

CAESAR—INVASIONS OF BRITAIN
Edited by John Brown, B.A. 1s. 6d.

CICERO—STORIES FROM CICERO.
Edited by A. C. Liddell, M.A. 1s. 6d.

CORNELIUS NEPOS: Selections. Ed-
ted by A. W. Carver, M.A. Cloth, 1s

CORNELIUS NEPOS: Select Biographies. Edited by J. E. Melluish. 1s. 6d

HORACE—HISTORICAL AND POLI-TICAL ODES. Edited by Prof. A. J
Church, M.A. Crown Svo, 2s. 6d.

OVID—STORIES FROM OVID. Ed-ted by A. H. Allcroft, M.A. 1s. 6d.

PHAEDRUS—SELECTIONS FROM PHAEDRUS, Books I and II. Edited by S. E. Winbolt, B.A. Cloth, 1s.

VIRGIL—AENEID. Book I. Edited by Prof. A. J. Church, M.A. Cloth, 1s.

VIRGIL—THE STORY OF AENEAS.
Edited by A. H. Allcroft, M.A. 2s.

EURIPIDES—THE MEDEA. Edited by P. B. Halcombe, M.A. Illustrated.
Crown Svo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

XENOPHON—ANABASIS. Book I.
Edited by C. E. Brownrigg, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Latin and Greek Grammars, &c.

A JUNIOR LATIN SYNTAX. By
A. J. Stevens, B.A. Cloth, 8d

ELEMENTARY LATIN GRAMMAR
Cloth, 1s.

LATIN GRAMMAR PAPERS For Middle Forms. By A. C. Liddell, M.A. 1s

PRAXIS PRIMARIA. By Dr. Islay
Burns 2s. Key, 3s. 6d.

LATIN STORIES. Edited by A. D
Godley, M.A. 1s.

LATIN PROSE OF THE SILVER
AGE: SELECTIONS. Edited by C. E
Brownrigg, M.A. With an Introduction
by T. H. Warren, M.A. 4s. 6d

FIRST STEPS IN CONTINUOUS
LATIN PROSE. By W. C. Flamstead
Walters, M.A. Cloth, 2s. Key, 3s. 6d.
Blackie's Educational Works

Hints and Helps in Continuous Latin Prose. By W. C. F. Walters, M.A. 2s. key, 2s. 6d. nett.

Hints and Helps in Continuous Greek Prose. By W. C. Flamstead Walters, M.A. cloth, 2s. 6d.

A Classical Compendium: being a Handbook to Greek and Latin Constructions. By C. E. Browntigg, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Myths and Legends of Greece and Rome. By E. M. Berens. 2s. 6d.

Latin Unseens: Junior Section, 3d.; Intermediate, 4d.; Senior, 6d.

Greek Unseens: Junior Section, 4d.; Senior Section, 8d.

Greek Grammar Papers. For Middle Forms. By A. C. Liddell, M.A. 1s. 6d.

English

A School History of English Literature. By Elizabeth Lee.

Vol. I. Chaucer to Marlowe. 1s. 6d.
Vol. II. Shakespeare to Dryden. 2s.

Specimens of English Prose. Selected and edited by Bertha Skeat, Ph.D. 1s. 6d.

The Warwick Library. General Editor—Professor C. H. Herford, Litt.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

English Pastoral. Edited by E. K. Chambers, B.A.

Literary Criticism. Edited by Professor C. F. Vaughan, M.A.

English Essays. Edited by J. H. Loblin, M.A.

English Lyric Poetry (1500-1700). Edited by F. L. Carpenter, M.A., Ph.D.

English Satires. Edited by Oliphant Smeaton, M.A.

English Tales in Verse. Edited by Professor Herford.

The Warwick Shakespeare. Edited for students and senior candidates in the University Local Examinations. Cloth, 1s. 6d. (with two exceptions).

Introduction to Shakespeare. By Prof. Dowden. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.

Blackie's Junior School Shakespeare.

As You Like It. Edited by Lionel W. Lyde, M.A. 8d.

Coriolanus. Edited by Walter Dent. 10d.

Cymbeline. Edited by W. F. Baugust, B.A. 10d.

Hamlet. Edited by L. W. Lyde, M.A. 10d.

Henry the Fifth. Edited by W. Barry. 8d.

Henry the Eighth. Edited by G. H. Ely. 8d.

Julius Caesar. Edited by Walter Dent. 8d.

King John. Edited by F. E. Webb, M.A. 8d.

King Lear. Edited by H. A. Evans, M.A. 8d.

Macbeth. Edited by H. C. Notcutt, B.A. 8d.

Merchant of Venice, The. Edited by George H. Ely, B.A. 8d.

Midsummer Night's Dream, A. Edited by W. F. Baugust, B.A. 8d.

Richard the Second. Edited by W. Barry. 8d.

Richard the Third. Edited by F. E. Webb, M.A. 10d.

Tempest, The. Edited by Elizabeth Lee. 8d.

Twelfth Night. Edited by the same. 8d.

The Picture Shakespeare. With coloured frontispiece and 15 other Illustrations. 1s. each.

Julius Caesar—As You Like It—Merchant of Venice—Henry the Fifth—Macbeth.

Blackie's English Classics.

Addison. Sir Roger de Coverley. Edited by Frances E. Wilcroft. 1s.

Browning. Stafford. Edited by Miss Agnes Wilson. 2s.

Carlyle. Readings from Carlyle. Edited by W. Keith Leask, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Chaucer. The Prologue to the Canterbury Tales. Edited by E. F. Willoughby, M.D. 1s. 6d.

Goldsmith. She Stoops to Conquer and the Good-Natured Man. Edited by Harold Littledale, M.A. 1s.

Lamb.—Select Tales from Shakespeare. Edited by D. Frew. 1s. 6d.
Longfellow.—The Courtship of Miles Standish. Edited by the Rev. Henry Evans, D.D. 1s.
Macaulay.—Essay on Addison. Edited by C. Sheldon, D.Litt. 2s.
Macaulay.—Essay on Clive. Edited by John Downie, M.A. 2s.
Macaulay.—Essay on Milton. Edited by John Downie, M.A. 2s.
Macaulay.—Horace, Lake Regillus, Prophecy of Capys. 6d.
Macaulay.—Lives of Johnson and Goldsmith. Edited by John Downie, M.A. 2s.
Millon.—Paradise Lost. Edited by P. Gorse, M.A. Books I, II, and III, each 1s.
Millon.—Samson Agonistes. Edited by E. K. Chambers, B.A. 1s. 6d.
Pope.—Essay on Criticism. Edited by Frederick Ryland, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Pope.—Essay on the Rake. Edited by Frederick Ryland, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Scott.—The Lay of the Last Minstrel. 1s. Cantos I-III, cloth, 9d.; IV-VI, cloth, 9d., paper, 6d.
Scott.—The Lady of the Lake. Edited by W. Keith Leask, M.A. 1s.
Scott.—Marmion. (Complete). 1s.

Junior School, English Class.
IC'S. Each (with a few exceptions), 32 pages, with Biographical Sketch, Notes, &c.; paper, 2d.; cloth, 3d.

Atwood.—The Burial March of Dundee and The Island of the Scots.
Browning.—The Pied Piper of Hamelin.
Burns.—The Cotter’s Saturday Night, &c. Notes below text.
Byron.—Childe Harold. Cantos I and III.
Byron.—The Prisoner of Chillon.
Byron.—The Prophecy of Dante.
Campbell.—Songs and Ballads.
Campbell.—The Pleasures of Hope. Part I.
Coleridge.—Rime of the Ancient Mariner.
Cowper.—John Gilpin, and other Poems.
Goldsmith.—The Deserted Village.
Goldsmith.—The Traveller.
Hogg.—The Queen’s Wake.
Longfellow.—Evangeline. Notes below text.
Macaulay.—Armada, Ivy, Battle of Naseby (one vol.). Battle of Lake Regillus (one vol.).
Prophecy of Capys (one vol.; paper only). Horatius (one vol.). Horatius and Lake Regillus, in one vol., cloth, 6d. Lay of Virginia (one vol.).
Miller.—L’Allegro and II Penseroso.
Moore.—Paradise and the Peri. Paper, 4d.
Moore.—The Fire Worshippers.
Scott.—Marmion. Cantos I and VI, each, paper, 3d.; cloth, 4d. Cantos II, III, IV, V, and selections from Cantos VI, paper, 2d., cloth, 3d.
Scott.—The Lay of the Last Minstrel. Cantos I, II, III, IV, V, VI, each separately.
Scott.—The Lady of the Lake. Cantos I, II, III, IV, V, VI, each separately.
Shakespeare. Selections from: As You Like It. Henry VIII. Richard II. Julius Caesar. The Merchant of Venice.
Southey.—Ballads and Other Poems.
Tennyson.—Morte d’Arthur. The Lady of Shalott (one vol.). Dora. The May Queen. Mariam (one vol.). The Day-Dream. The Death of the Old Year. The Charge of the Light Brigade (one vol.).
Wordsworth.—Selections from the Shorter Poems.

English Language, &c.
The Pupil’s English Grammar. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.
The Elements of English Prose. By W. A. Brockington, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
Higher English: A Course of English Study for Middle and Upper Forms. By David Campbell. Fcap 8vo, 1s. 6d.
Lower English. By David Campbell. Fcap 8vo, cloth, 1s.
English for Beginners. By David Campbell. Cloth boards, 1s.; limp cloth, 10d.
Handbook of English Composition Exercises. Cloth, 1s.
Stories and Essays. Cloth, 1s.
Selections for Paraphrasing. Selected by W. Murison, M.A. Cloth, 1s.

Modern Languages
The Picture French Primers. By Marguerite Ninet.
First French Primer. 127 small Illustrations, with Simple Letterpress and Vocabulary. 6d.
Second French Primer. 32 larger Illustrations, with Simple Descriptive Sentences and Vocabulary. 6d.
My First French Book. A Picture Reading Book. 36 Stories and Sketches with Vocabularies. 44 Illustrations, and Exercises for Retranslation. 1s.
French Reading Books for Lower Forms.
French Tales for Beginners. By Marguerite Ninet. With complete Vocabularies. 1s.
French Stories for Junior Forms. With Notes, &c. By Marguerite Ninet. 1s.
CONTES FRANÇAIS. Amusing short stories of the fairy-tale order. Edited by É. B. le François. 1s.

LES DEUX BOSSUS. Edited by Émile B. Le François. With a frontispiece by Alice B. Woodward. 1s.

FLEUR DE MÉR. By Pierre Mael. Edited, with Vocabulary, &c., by J. Boelle, Bê-lès-L. 1s.

For Middle Forms.

LE COUP DE PISTOLET (Prosper Mérimée's popular story). Edited by J. E. Michell, M.A. 1s.

TAMANGO. By Prosper Mérimée. Edited by J. E. Michell, M.A. 1s.

SONGS OF BÉRANGER. Edited by George H. Ely, B.A. 1s.

LE TRÉSOR DE MONTE CRISTO (from Dumas' Novel). Edited by B. Proper. Illustrated. 1s. 6d.

LES AILES DE COURAGE. By George Sand. Edited by B. Proper. Illustrated. 1s. 6d.

ACHILLE ET PATROCLE. By Léon Cladel. Edited by Émile B. le François. 8d.

LES TRAPPEURS DE L'ARKANSAS. By Gustave Aimard. Edited by Marguerite Ninet. 1s. With Vocabulary, 1s. 6d.

VOYAGES EN ZIGZAG. By Rudolphe Töpffer. Edited by Ascott R. Hope. 1s. With Vocabulary, 1s. 6d.

LE SONGE D'OR, and other STORIES FOR MIDDLE AND UPPER FORMS. By Ernest Weekley, M.A. 1s. 6d.

READINGS IN FRENCH. A companion volume to French Stories. By Marguerite Ninet. 1s. 6d.

A MODERN FRENCH READER. With Notes and Vocabulary, &c., by J. J. Beuzemaker, B.A. 1s.

For Senior Forms.

SELECTIONS FROM TAINE. Edited by Francis Storr, B.A., with an Introduction by C. Sarolea, Ph.D., Litt.D. 1s. 6d.

LETTERS DE PAUL-LOUIS COURIER. Edited by J. G. Anderson, B.A. 1s. With Vocabulary, 1s. 6d.

THE COURT OF SPAIN UNDER CHARLES II. By Paul de Saint-Victor. Edited by Francis Storr, B.A. 1s. With Vocabulary, 1s. 6d.

LE SIÈGE DE PARIS. By Francisque Sarcey. Edited by F. B. Kirkman, B.A. 1s. With Vocabulary, 1s. 6d.

BLACKIE'S LITTLE FRENCH CLASSICS. Fcap 8vo, limp cloth, price 4d. each.

I. Rabelais—Selections. Edited by E. C. Goldberg, M.A.

II. MOUCHE—Scènes from La Mèdecin Malgré Lui. Edited by W. J. Clark, M.A.

III. LESEAGE—Selections from Gill Blas. Edited by Harold W. Atkinson, M.A.

IV. Prosper Mérimée—Mateo Falcone and other stories. Edited by J. E. Michell, M.A.

VI. La Fontaine—Select Fables. Edited by A. H. Wall, M.A.

VII. De Musset—Selections. Edited by F. W. B. Smart, M.A.

Others to follow

French and German Unseens.

FRENCH UNSEENS. Junior Section, 3d. Middle Section, cloth, 1s. Senior Section, cloth, 1s. 6d.

FRENCH WEEKLY TESTS. Compiled by E. B. le François. Paper, 4d. Containing a test-paper for each week in the school year. KEY, 2s. 6d. nett post free, from the publishers only.

GERMAN UNSEENS. Lower, 4d. Middle and Upper, selected by W. G. Etheridge, M.A. 2s.

German.

A FIRST GERMAN BOOK. By L. A. Lowe. Fully illustrated. 1s. 6d.

GERMAN STORIES. With Notes, &c. By L. de Saumarez Brock. 1s. 6d.

SCHILLER'S SONG OF THE BELL, and other Poems. Edited by George Macdonald, M.A. 8d.

KOTZEBUE'S DER GERADE WEG DER BESTE. Edited by the Rev. J. H. D. Matthews, M.A. 6d.

Grammar, Composition, &c.

PARLONS FRANÇAIS. A Conversational Method of French. By F. Julien, French Master in King Edward Grammar School, Birmingham. 2s. 6d.

A FIRST FRENCH COURSE. By J. J. Beuzemaker, B.A. 1s. 6d.

A SECOND FRENCH COURSE. By J. J. Beuzemaker, B.A. 2s. 6d.

KEYS.—These well-known French Courses are now provided with KEYS, in response to requests from many teachers. They are supplied to teachers only on direct application to the publishers. FIRST FRENCH COURSE, post free, 2s. 6d.; SECOND FRENCH COURSE, post free, 3s. 6d.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Book Title</th>
<th>Author</th>
<th>Edition</th>
<th>Format</th>
<th>Price</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A FIRST GERMAN COURSE</td>
<td>A. R. Lechner</td>
<td>1s. 6d.</td>
<td>Key, 2s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A SECOND GERMAN COURSE</td>
<td>H. Baumann, M.A.</td>
<td>2s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PRACTICAL FRENCH GRAMMAR</td>
<td>C. O. Somtag</td>
<td>Cloth, 2s.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A PRIMER OF HISTORICAL FRENCH GRAMMAR</td>
<td>Professor Weekley</td>
<td>M.A. 2s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A COMPREHENSIVE FRENCH MANUAL</td>
<td>For Examination Students</td>
<td>Otto C. Nat, M.A. 3s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A COMPLETE COURSE OF FRENCH COMPOSITION AND VOCABULARY</td>
<td>Hector Rey</td>
<td>B.Ed., B.Sc. 3s 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A MANUAL OF FRENCH PROSE CONSTRUCTION</td>
<td>J. G. Anderson</td>
<td>B.A. 5s.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FRENCH IRREGULAR VERBS</td>
<td>Marcel Roscy</td>
<td>6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>French Literature</td>
<td>Marcel Roscy</td>
<td>1s.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A HISTORICAL SKETCH OF FRENCH LITERATURE</td>
<td>Marcel Roscy</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A PRIMER OF FRENCH LITERATURE</td>
<td>Professor Weekley</td>
<td>2s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A SHORT HISTORY OF FRENCH LITERATURE</td>
<td>L. E. Kastner D.A. and H. G. Atkins, M.A. 4s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A NOTE BOOK OF FRENCH LITERATURE</td>
<td>P. C. Yorke, M.A.</td>
<td>Vol I to end of 15th century. 6s. net</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Commercial Correspondance</td>
<td>Easy Stages</td>
<td>Alfred Starck 1s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>FIRST COURSE OF GERMAN COMMERCIAL CORRESPONDENCE</td>
<td>Alfred Oswald, Lecturer in German at the Athenaeum Commercial College, Glasgow. Cloth, Svo, cl. 2s. KEY, 3s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>History</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE OXFORD MANUALS OF ENGLISH HISTORY</td>
<td>Edited by C.W.C. Oman, M.A.</td>
<td>Cloth, 1s. each.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1. The Making of the English Nation</td>
<td>C.G. Robertson, B.A.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. King and Baronage</td>
<td>W. H. Dalton, B.D.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. England and the Hundred Years' War</td>
<td>W. H. Dalton, B.D.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4. England and the Reformation</td>
<td>C.W.C. Oman, M.A.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. England and the Reformation</td>
<td>G.W. Powers, M.A.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6. The Making of the British Empire</td>
<td>Arthur Haswell, M.A.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LANDMARKS IN ENGLISH INDUSTRIAL HISTORY</td>
<td>G. Townsend-Warner, M.A.</td>
<td>5s.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A BRIEF SURVEY OF BRITISH HISTORY</td>
<td>G. Townsend-Warner, M.A.</td>
<td>With Tables, Summaries, Maps, Notes, &amp;c. 1s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SYNOPSIS of the same</td>
<td>6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A SUMMARY OF BRITISH HISTORY</td>
<td>Edgar Sanderson, M.A.</td>
<td>1s.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A HISTORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE</td>
<td>Edgar Sanderson, M.A. 476 pages.  Fcap Svo, cloth, 2s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE WARWICK ENGLISH HISTORY</td>
<td>From B.C. 55 to the present time. 3s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE WARWICK HISTORY READERS</td>
<td>Seven Illustrated Reading Books in English History. List on application.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE RALEIGH HISTORY READERS</td>
<td>Illustrated History Reading Books in four numbers.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AN EPITOME OF HISTORY, Ancient, Medi eval, and Modern</td>
<td>Carl Placet, Translated by W. H. Tillichast, 7s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OUTLINES OF THE WORLD'S HISTORY</td>
<td>By Edgar Sanderson, M.A. 6s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Also:—Part I, ANTIQUE ORIENTAL MONARCHIES, 1s.; Part II, GREECE AND ROME, 2s.; Part III, MEDIEVAL HISTORY, 1s.; Part IV, MODERN HISTORY, 2s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A SYNOPSIS OF ENGLISH HISTORY</td>
<td>Herbert Wills, Crown Svo, cloth, 2s.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A SYNOPSIS OF SCOTTISH HISTORY</td>
<td>Herbert Wills, Crown Svo, cloth, 2s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE SCOTS READER: a History of Scotland for Junior Pupils</td>
<td>David Campbell, Fcap Svo, cloth, 1s.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OUR COUNTRY: a History for Lower Forms</td>
<td>By Edgar Sanderson, M.A.  Illustrated Cloth, 1s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE STORY OF ENGLAND: a History for Lower Forms</td>
<td>By Edgar Sanderson, M.A.  Illustrated 1s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Geography</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MAN ON THE EARTH: A Course in Geography</td>
<td>Lionel W. Lyde, M.A. Fully Illustrated, Crown Svo, cloth, 2s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OBJECT LESSONS IN GEOGRAPHY</td>
<td>David Frew, B.A. In three parts, 1s. 6d. each</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE</td>
<td>W.G. Baker, M.A. Cloth, 3s. 6d.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>INTRODUCTORY GEOGRAPHY</td>
<td>W.G. Baker, M.A. With 70 Illustrations, and Maps. Cloth, 1s.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
BLACKIE'S DESCRIPTIVE GEOGRAPHICAL MANUALS. By W. G. Baker, M.A.

No. 1. Realistic Elementary Geography. Taught by Picture and Plan. 1s. 6d.

No. 2. The British Isles. 2s.

No. 3. The British Colonies and India. 2s.

No. 4. Europe (except the British Isles). Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

No. 5. The World (except Europe). Cloth, 2s.

Australasia: a Descriptive Account. By W. Wilkins. 2s. 6d.

A SYNOPSIS OF GEOGRAPHY OF THE WORLD: a Concise Handbook. 1s.

THE GEOGRAPHY OF NORTH AMERICA. THE GEOGRAPHY OF ASIA. Each, cloth, 6d.

THE CENTURY GEOGRAPHICAL HANDBOOKS: with Maps, &c. In 8 Numbers, prices 2d. to 4d. each.

THE RALEIGH GEOGRAPHY READERS. Illustrated Geography Reading Books. Crown 8vo, cloth.

Book IV.—Introductory Geography. 1s 6d.

Book V.—Geography of Great Britain and Ireland. 1s. 6d.

Book VI.—Geography of Greater Britain. 1s. 6d.

Book VII.—A Brief Introduction to Commercial Geography. 1s. 6d.

Mathematics

LAYNG'S ARITHMETIC. By A. E. Layng, M.A. 4s. 6d. Also in Two Parts each, with or without Answers, 2s. 6d.

LAYNG'S EXERCISES IN ARITHMETIC. Being the Exercises of the above, published separately. Without Answers, 2s. 6d.; with Answers, 3s.

Part I (5000 Exercises), without Answers, 1s.; with Answers, 1s. 6d.

Part II (3500 Exercises), without Answers, 1s. 6d.; with Answers, 2s.

HIGHER ARITHMETIC AND MENSURATION. For Civil Service, and Higher Examinations. By E. Murray. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Answers, 3s. 6d.

_PICKERING'S MERCANTILE ARITHMETIC, for Commercial Classes. By E. T. Pickering. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

EXAMINATION ARITHMETIC. Problems and Exercises (with Answers) from University Local Exam. Papers. By T. S. Harvey. Cloth, 2s. Key, 4s. 6d.

A COMPLETE ARITHMETIC. Cloth. With Answers, 1s. 6d. Exercises only, 192 pages, Is. Answers alone, 6d.

EUCLID'S ELEMENTS OF GEOMETRY. With Notes, Examples, and Exercises. Arranged by A. E. Layng, M.A. Books I to VI, with XI, and Appendix. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Books I to IV in one vol., 2s. 6d.

Book I, 1s. II, 6d.; III, 1s.; IV, 6d.; I-II, 1s. 6d.; I-III, 2s.; V and VI together, 1s.; XI, 1s. 6d. KEY to BOOK I, 2s. 6d.; to Complete Euclid, 5s.

A NEW SEQUEL TO EUCLID. By Professor W. J. Dilworth, M.A. 2s. 6d. Also in Parts: Part I, 1s.; Part II, 2s.

PRELIMINARY ALGEBRA. By R. Wyke Bayliss, B.A. 1s.

ALGEBRA. To Progressions and Scales of Notation. By J. G. Kerr, M.A. With Answers, 2s. 6d.; without Answers, 2s.

LAYNG'S EXERCISES IN ALGEBRA. By A. E. Layng, M.A. 1s.

ALGEBRAIC FACTORS. By Dr. W. T. Knight. Fcap 8vo, cloth, 2s.

ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF TRIGONOMETRY. By R. H. Pinkerton, B.A. Fcap 8vo, cloth, 2s.

MATHEMATICAL WRINKLES for Matriculation and other Exams. By Dr. W. T. Knight. Fcap 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE DIFFERENTIAL AND INTEGRAL CALCULUS. By W. J. Millar, C.E. 1s. 6d.

Science

DESCHANEL'S NATURAL PHILOSOPHY. An Elementary Treatise. By Professor Deschanel, of Paris. Translated and edited by Professor J. D. Everett, D.C.L., F.R.S. Medium 8vo, cloth, 15s.; also in Parts, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

Part I.—Mechanics, Hydrostatics, &c.

Part II.—Heat.

Part III.—Electricity and Magnetism.

Part IV.—Sound and Light.

ELECTRICITY. By Prof. J. D. Everett, M.A., F.R.S. Being an expansion on the lines of modern electrical theory of Everett's Deschanel's Natural Philosophy Part III. Cloth, 4s. 6d.

A TEXT-BOOK OF ORGANIC CHEMISTRY. By A. Berthelsen, Ph.D. Translated by George McGowan, Ph.D. 7s. 6d.

FUEL AND REFRACTORY MATERIALS. By A. Humboldit Sexton, F.I.C., F.C.S. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

A TEXT-BOOK OF SOLID OR DESCRIPTIVE GEOMETRY. By Alex. B. Dobbie, B.Sc. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

HYDROSTATICS AND PNEUMATICS. By R. H. Pinkerton, B.A. 4s. 6d.
HEAT AND THE PRINCIPLES OF THERMO-DYNAMICS. By C. H. Draper, D.Sc., B.A. Cloth, 4s. 6d.

AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF ANATOMY. By Henry Edward Clark, M.B., C.M.i. Crown Svo, cloth, 5s.

ELEMENTARY PHYSIOLOGY. By Prof. Ainsworth Davis. Cloth, 2s.

THE STUDENT'S INTRODUCTORY TEXT-BOOK OF SYSTEMATIC BOTANY. By Joseph W. Oliver. 4s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF PHYSICS. By Prof. Everett. Cl., 3s. 6d.

OUTLINES OF NATURAL PHILOSOPHY. By Professor J. D. Everett. Fcap, Svo, cloth, 4s.

THEORETICAL MECHANICS. By R. H. Pinkerton, B.A. Fcap Svo, cloth, 2s.

ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF DYNAMICS AND HYDRAULICS. By R. H. Pinkerton, B.A. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE ARITHMETIC OF MAGNETISM AND ELECTRICITY. By Robert Gunn. Fcap Svo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

MAGNETISM AND ELECTRICITY. By W. Jerome Harrison and Charles A. White. Fcap Svo, cloth, 2s.

LIGHT, HEAT, AND SOUND. By Charles H. Draper, D.Sc. (Lond.). 2s.

ELEMENTARY INORGANIC CHEMISTRY: Theoretical and Practical. By Professor A. Humboldt Sexton. 2s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO ANALYTICAL CHEMISTRY. By George Gerald Henderson, D.Sc., M.A., and Matthew A. Parker, B.Sc. Crown Svo, cloth, 5s.

CHEMISTRY FOR ALL, or Elementary Alternative Chemistry. By W. Jerome Harrison, F.G.S., and R. J. Bailey. 1s. 6d.

QUALITATIVE CHEMICAL ANALYSIS, Inorganic and Organic. By Edgar E. Horwill. F.C.S. Fcap Svo, cloth, 2s.

AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF PHYSIOLOGY. By J. McGregor-Robertson, M.A., M.B. Fcap Svo, cloth, 4s.

ELEMENTARY PHYSIOLOGY. By Vincent T. Marché. Fcap Svo, cloth, 2s.

ELEMENTARY BOTANY. By Joseph W. Oliver. Fcap svo, cloth, 2s.

A TEXT-BOOK OF GEOLOGY. By W. J. Harrison, F.G.S. Crown Svo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF APPLIED MECHANICS. By David Allan Low. Fcap Svo, cloth, 2s.

FIRST STEPS IN EARTH-KNOWLEDGE. By J. Ansted Harrison, B.Sc. (Lond.), A.R.C.S. Edited by W. Jerome Harrison, F.G.S. Illustrated. Crown svo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY AGRICULTURE. Edited by Professor R. P. Wright. 1s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY HYGIENE. By H. Rowland Wakefield. Fcap Svo, 2s.

ELEMENTARY PHYSICS: Practical and Theoretical. By John G. Kerr, M.A. Illustrated. Crown svo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY CHEMISTRY: Practical and Theoretical. By Thomas A. Cheetham, F.C.S. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY HYGIENE AND PHYSIOLOGY. By H. Rowland Wakefield. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

FOOD AND ITS FUNCTIONS. A Text-Book for Students of Cookery. By James Knight, M.A., B.Sc. 2s. 6d.

PROGRESSIVE LESSONS IN SCIENCE. By A. Abbott, M.A., and Arthur Key, M.A. With Introduction by T. G. Rooper, H.M.I.S. 3s. 6d.

Science for Beginners

CHEMISTRY FOR BEGINNERS. By W. Jerome Harrison. Cloth, 1s.

AGRICULTURE FOR BEGINNERS. Edited by Professor R. P. Wright. Cl., 1s.

BOTANY FOR BEGINNERS. By Vincent T. Marché. Cloth, 1s.

MAGNETISM AND ELECTRICITY FOR BEGINNERS. By W. G. Baker, M.A. Cloth, 1s.

BLACKIE'S OBJECT-LESSON AND SCIENCE READERS. Fully illustrated.

Natural History Course

Infant Reader: Country Stories 6d.

Book II. — Tales and Talks. Part II 1d.

Book III. — Seaside and Wayside; or, The Young Scientists. Is.

Book IV. — Our Friends of the Farm. By the Rev. Theodore Wood. Is. 4d.

Book VI. — Animal and Plant Life. Part II. By the Rev. Theodore Wood. 1s. 6d.

General Course

Nos. I. —IV. — Same as in Nat. Hist. Course. Is. 4d.

No. V. — The Young Mechanics. Is. 6d.

No. V. — The Young Chemists. By W. Furneaux. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Nos. VI. and VII. — Lessons on Living. By H. Rowland Wakefield. Cloth, 1s. 6d.
MECHANICS FOR BEGINNERS. By David Clark. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

ANIMAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR BEGINNERS. With Coloured Illustrations. By Vincent T. Murché. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Reading Books
BLACKIE'S SUPPLEMENTARY READERS. Edited for Higher Standards and Evening Continuation Schools.

Passages from Modern Authors for Class Reading. Edited by J. Downie, M.A. 1s.
The Story of Leicester: Town and County: A Reading-book for Schools. 1s. 6d.
The Spectator Reader: Selections from Addison's Spectator. 1s. 6d.
Readings from Sir Walter Scott. 1s. 3d.
Mary Queen of Scots: being Readings from The Abbot. 1s. 3d.
Tales from Henty: Selections from the Romances of G.A. Henty. Illustrated. 1s. 6d.
The Charles Dickens Reader. 1s. 4d.
The Citizen: His Rights and Responsibilities. By Oscar Browning, M.A. 1s. 6d.
The British Biographical Reader. 1s. 6d.
Readings from Robinson Crusoe. Illustrated by Gordon Browne. 1s. 6d.
Blackie's Shakespeare Reader. 1s.
Poetical Reader: Selections from Standard Authors. 1s. 6d.

THE PALMERSTON READERS. New series of Reading Books with coloured Illustrations. In Ten Books, including THE SIGHT & SOUND PRIMERS. Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, on application.

STORIES FOR THE SCHOOLROOM. Edited by J. H. Yoxall. Selections from the works of favourite modern authors, illustrated by leading artists. Five books, prices 6d. to 1s. 6d. Primers, 3d. to 6d.

THE CENTURY READERS. Six books, prices 8d. to 1s. 6d. Primers, 2d. to 6d.

Elocution
BAYNHAM'S ELOCUTION: Selections from leading Authors and Dramatists. By George W. Baynham. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE PRACTICAL ELOCUTIONIST. By John Forsyth. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

Drawing, Painting, Writing, &c.
VERE FOSTER'S MODEL DRAWING. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

VERE FOSTER'S DRAWING COPY-BOOKS. 72 Numbers at 2d. Complete Edition, in Eighteen Parts at 9d. (Each part complete in itself.)

VERE FOSTER'S RUDIMENTARY PERSPECTIVE. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

VERE FOSTER'S WATER-COLOUR DRAWING-BOOKS. With coloured fac-similes of original water-colour drawings, and hints and directions. Complete List on application.

POYNTER'S SOUTH KENSINGTON DRAWING-BOOKS. Issued under the direct superintendence of E. J. Poynter, P.R.A. Complete List on application.

A SELECTION FROM THE LIBER STUDIOrUM OF J. M. W. TURNER, R.A. In Four Parts, square folio, 12s. 6d. each; or complete in Portfolio, £2, 12s. 6d.

VERE FOSTER'S WRITING COPY-BOOKS.

Original Series, in 22 Numbers, price 2d. each.
Palmerston Series, in 11 Numbers, on fine paper ruled in blue and red, price 3d. each.
Bold Writing, or Civil Service Series, in 27 Numbers, price 2d. each.
Medium Series, in 12 Numbers, price 2d. each.
Vere Foster's Penny Copy Books, in 10 Numbers, price 1d. each.
Upright Series, in 12 Numbers, price 2d. each.

Dictionaries, &c.

THE STUDENT'S ENGLISH DICTIONARY. By John Ogilvie, LL.D. New Edition, revised and enlarged by Charles Annandale, M.A., LL.D. Illustrated by 800 Engravings. Large fcap 4to, cloth, 7s. 6d.; half-persian, 10s. 6d.; half-morocco, flexible, 12s. 6d.

ANNANDALE'S CONCISE ENGLISH DICTIONARY. By Charles Annandale, M.A., LL.D. New Edition, revised and extended; 864 pp., fcap 4to, cloth, 3s. 6d.; Roxburgh, 5s. 6d.; half-morocco, 7s. 6d.

OGILVIE'S SCHOOL DICTIONARY. Etymological, Pronouncing, and Explanatory. For the use of Schools. By John Ogilvie, LL.D. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; Roxburgh, 5s. 6d.

COMMON WORDS COMMONLY MISPRONOUNCED. With Hints on Correct Articulation. By W. Ramsay-Crawford. Cloth, 2s.

A PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY OF MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES, nearly ten thousand in number. By George G. Chisholm, M.A., B.Sc. Fcap 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.